$30,000,000 Now Seeing Is Dangerous

A Dying Dinosaur

No Modern Cromwell

—By Arthur Brisbane—

Copyright, 1920.

Mr. Cox said the Republicans were trying to collect fifteen million dollars "to buy the country." That would be fifteen cents apiece for each inhabitant of the country. That didn't cause much excitement.

Now Mr. Cox says the Republicans are raising a fund of thirty millions. Double the first amount. Perhaps that alarming statement will be more effective.

Meanwhile, Democrats are puzzled about their own campaign fund. Money by popular subscription doesn't seem to come in very fast. No great enthusiasm about financing the War League of Nations. The saddest part is this. Ordinarily big corporations give on both sides, feeling that either side may win.

But this time the dullest corporation gentleman knows well that Cox is beaten, and says to himself, "What's the use of helping to finance a dead one?" That makes the Democratic money-raising campaign hard, and any sympathy you have to spare should go to Mr. White, who must do the money raising.

Max Rabinowitz of New York dealt in furs and Liberty Bonds. As an advertisement he displayed day after day a thousand-dollar Liberty Bond in his window. Harry Van Reed murdered Rabinowitz, wounded his wife, trying to get the one thousand-dollar bond. He failed. Passing the window and seeing the bond day after day, he made up his mind to get it.

It is dangerous to expose meat within reach of a hungry dog.

You might tell about the bonds in writing and escape murder. You might tell the dog about the meat in safety. It is actual seeing that does the mischief.

In that murder there is a warning more important than notice to bond dealers and pawn brokers to avoid temptation to crime in front window displays. This serves notice on the very prosperous to beware of foolish ostentation. Those that waste should do it in private, where it will not be seen by those that kick.

Human psychology is curious, and that which is actually seen is most dangerous.

The dinosaur, seventy to a hundred feet long, biggest thing in creation, probably expected to last forever. But he has disappeared. His was too big. It took too long for his small head to know what was happening to the end of his tail when one of the small, carnivorous dinosaurs attacked him.

What happened to the ancient dinosaur will happen to the modern dinosaur, the British empire. For a dinosaur it has been well managed. It is not likely that any other country on earth could have managed as much of the earth as long and successfully, on the whole, as England has managed, from the Arctic region to the equator, and on down to the South Pole.

The imperial British dinosaur evidently has reached the limit of its growth. Soon the English government may find itself ruling only those that speak English, perhaps not all that it rules now.

Egypt is to have some kind of a home rule at once. That is one sign there has been much dissatisfaction in Egypt.

The Prince of Wales has decided not to include India in his travels; another sign.

There has been much unrest in India and too much shooting of the natives.

Lovat Fraser, intelligent observer, who writes for Lord Northcliffe, says: "We must relinquish remote imperial commitments and set to work to restore our finances."

The idea is that the relinquishment will include only "the dry desiccated lands in the Middle East." Mr. Fraser says: "we can not police half Asia. We cannot indeed, for Asia will not allow it."

No ships from America allowed to land at Queenstown, but westbound ships may land there. The English intelligent manners plan carefully. Westbound ships will carry away emigrants, thus decreasing population opposed to English rule. No ship from America will be able to land De Valera in his Irish republic.

With 80,000 soldiers in Ireland, it is evidently planned to have a regular fight, a reconquest, somewhat modified, on the Cromwell order. To realize what 80,000 British soldiers in Ireland" means, imagine an army of 50,000 occupying part of one average sized State in this country.

A conquest of Ireland seems planned, but it is not likely, with the best will in the world, that any British commander will again send back to Parliament a report to equal Cromwell's: "I have pacified this island, Ireland. I shot every tenth man. The rest I sent to the galleys. The monks I knocked on the head."

POLICE GET CLEW OUTSIDE CITY

By International News Service

New York, Sept. 17.—A piece of metal and an iron slug weighing a pound, believed to have been part of the bomb which wrecked the Morgan bank, were found on the roof of the United States sub-treasury building today. They were found by Deputy Assistant Treasurer Grant, who turned them over to the police.

Part of the mechanism of a clock was found in debris in front of the subtreasury. These are the chief clews upon which the Federal, State and city authorities are now desperately at work to run down the plotters who exploded the "TNT" bomb in Wall street.

The total number of dead is now 33. Four died in hospitals today.

Estimates of stocks and bonds that were lost or stolen during the explosion excitement were $400,000.

Secret service agents and officials of the police department and of the district attorney's office said that the discovery of the shattered clock works confirms the theory that terrorists, probably anarchists,

WARNINGS OF NEW YORK BOMB PLOT WERE DISREGARDED

"FRIEND OF FRANCE" SENT WORD TO OFFICIALS

were responsible for the deadly and devastating blast.

With all public buildings and churches and the residence of J. P. Morgan in this city under heavy guard a nation-wide search is being made to run down the plotters.

The clock works are being studied by experts to determine their manufacture and source.

No arrests have been made. The men who drove the one-horse truck, carrying the most powerful infernal machine ever devised in this country, disappeared in the Wall street crowds as completely as though the earth had opened and swallowed them up.

INVESTIGATING TWO WARNINGS.

Other important links have been forged in the chain of evidence to prove that conspirators carefully planned the outrage.

The police have learned that warnings of a catastrophe in the financial district were received in advance by at least two persons.

One of these warnings came to Lieutenant Arnaud, chief of the French High Commission, on Wednesday. The other was received by George F. Ketchledge, an employe of the brokerage firm of B. F. Schwartz & Co., at No. 2 Broadway, also on Wednesday.

Both warnings are said to have been sent by a former employe of the French High Commission. His name is in possession of the authorities and search is being made for him.

While soldiers with fixed bayonets paced up and down in front of the United States Sub-Treasury building throughout the night, feverish search was made of the debris in and around the Morgan offices for additional dead and bomb evidence.

The original estimate of 24 dead was increased to 30 by deaths of injured, and it was reported today that this total may be increased as some of the 363 wounded are in serious condition.

PROPERTY DAMAGE $2,500,000.

The property damage from the blast is put at $2,500,000.

On the assumption that the Wall street explosion was the beginning of a wave of "Red" terrorism, public officials have been warned to employ body guards.

Picked men from the police department are guarding the homes of public officials. Wall and Broad streets, the "financial capital of the world," seem like an armed camp with soldiers, policemen and special armed guards on duty.

The Stock Exchange building and the great banks in the Wall street district are pickeled. A new police "dead line" has been established. Every person who crosses it is closely scrutinized; so is every vehicle.

A general police alarm has been sent out for missing or stolen one-horse trucks such as that in which the time bomb was carried to the Morgan bank. The broken parts of the wagon, which was demolished by the detonation, have been pieced together as well as possible and the police are now trying to find the owner of it. That the plotters have an efficient organization with secret sources of information is indicated by the fact that the explosion occurred just twenty-four hours after the special bomb squad operatives of the police department were withdrawn from the financial district.

CHECKING UP ANARCHISTS.

Lists of all the known dangerous anarchists in the United States are being carefully checked over by the government sleuths. The Federal end of the investigation is directed by William J. Flynn, head of the United States secret service, who is on the ground in person. Police Commissioner Enright has divided the police investigation along the following lines:

1—Tracing the writer of the warning letters, which are now in the possession of the police department.

2—Searching for the owners of the one-horse wagon in which the bomb was carried to Wall street.

3—Hunting for an automobile in which the men who drove the wagon are said to have fled a few moments before the explosion.

4—Tracing the source of the clock which was used to set off the bomb at one minute after 12 o'clock Thursday noon.

5—Hunting for the source of the "TNT" or other explosive that was used in the construction of the infernal machine.

6—Ascertaining where the bomb was constructed and how many persons were involved in the conspiracy.

The warning letter sent to Lieutenant Arnaud did not arrive through the mails. It was dropped through the slot in the door of the commission's offices at No. 65 Broadway on Wednesday morning. The letter was written with pen and ink and opened with the word: "Greetings." It was contained in a small white envelope.

WARNING WAS DISREGARDED.

Lieutenant Arnaud did not take the warning seriously. After reading it he tore the letter into bits, dropped it into a waste basket and forgot all about it—until after the Wall street district was rocked by the most ghastly explosion in New York's history.

Then he secured the tatters, pasted them together and gave them to the police. The letter intimated that "certain persons who had grievances" would get revenge by setting off a high-power bomb between 2 o'clock and 2:30, but the exact date of the explosion was not given. The writer said he had the kindest feelings for France and for the members of the French High Commission, which accounted for his warning. He suggested that the commission's office be closed and that the officials stay away from Wall street.

LETTER SENT TO KETCHLEDGE.

The letter received by Mr. Ketchledge was mailed from Toronto, Ont. Mr. Ketchledge at first refused to make it public, but later gave it out. The contents, which are brief, follow:

Greetings: Get out of Wall street on the gong strike of 3 o'clock Wednesday, the 15th of September. Good luck to you.

ED FISCHER.

"I knew Fischer well but I did not put much stock in his warning," said Mr. Ketchledge. "He was a lawyer by profession, but was unable to practice his profession for many years on

BOMB SUSPECTS SEEN BY GIRL

Caller at Her Office Also Witnessed Flight of Auto Party

By International News Service.

New York, Sept. 17.—The police are today in possession of the testimony of two persons who assert that they saw an auto load of suspicious looking characters flee from the scene immediately after the explosion in Wall street yesterday. Miss Matilda Schiess, a stenographer in the Wall street district, said:

"Just a second after the explosion I looked out of the window over Wall street, which was full of flame and smoke. Directly across the street was a car filled with men. Two more men came running up and one of them wore what looked like a bloody shirt. They leaped into the car, which at once darted away towards the East river. They were all very suspicious looking. This happened before the smoke had cleared away and before the relief work started."

Thomas Le Boutellier, who was calling in the office in which Miss Schiess is employed, bore out her story.

"I looked out the window right after the explosion," he told the police, "and I saw a dull gray-colored automobile moving slowly eastward on Wall street. There were three or four men in it. Two or three others then came running up to it. They seem to have been stunned as they stumbled along. Two of them helped a third. They climbed into the car, which then speeded away toward the East River."

Escapes by Shielding Head with Arms

New York, Sept. 17.—John Markle, a wealthy coal operator from Jeddo, Pa, may have saved himself from serious injury by throwing his arms around his head and face when he saw the flare of the explosion.

He was at a conference on the second floor of the Morgan & Company building. His protective action preceded by the merest fraction of a second a shower of glass which inflicted superficial wounds.

Markle, who is familiar with explosives, declared the effects on the surrounding walls showed that the centre of the burst was at the curb near the Morgan side of the street.

WANTS LOCAL BOARDS TO HANDLE HOUSING

Eugene C. Hultman, chairman of the State Commission on the Necessities of Life, announces that the commission had recommended that local boards deal with the housing problem, so far as possible, sending only appeal cases to the State board when it is found impossible to bring landlord and tenant into agreement, or when local committees lack authority. Otherwise, he said, early settlements would not be obtained.

A Lesson of the Times

The Bigger The Bait The Greater The Risk

It seems to be a tendency of the times to bear out the old adage that money which comes easy, goes easy.

Thousands and thousands of persons have been enjoying greatly increased incomes in recent years, and many, to their sorrow, have not taken as good care of their surplus as they might have done.

It has never failed that at times when money was plentiful, all sorts of get-rich-quick schemes are concocted to separate the unsuspecting from their money.

The usual plan is to offer alluring dividends—the more questionable the proposition the bigger the bait offered.

How much better is it to place your savings in the keeping of a high class institution like the United States Trust Company, whose financial strength is known and accepted by the shrewdest business brains in the country!

Study the list of directors. The reputation of each and every one of these men guarantees the careful handling of your savings.

Be true to yourself and your dear ones by placing your savings where they ARE safe—with the United States Trust Company!

'RED' BOMBERS THREATEN TO TIE UP RAILROADS AND COAL MINES

INVESTIGATORS ARE PROBING BURNS AGENCY REPORT

account of recurring attacks of paranoia. He had been committed to institutions but was released as cured.

"He had an intense hatred of Wall street. That was the form his mental illness took. So far as I know he never suffered any financial reverses in Wall street. I do not believe that Fischer has any intimate knowledge about this dreadful disaster. He was not a member of any radical organization. It is probable that he was suffering from one of his periodic mentl aberrations when he sent the warning and the fact that the explosion occurred about that time was a coincidence."

Fischer is said to have gone to Canada to attend a tennis watch. He has been in ill health recently and his parents were attempting to persuade him to enter a sanitarium.

Eighteen of the dead in the explosion were taken to the Morgue. They included four women and a boy. Medical officials who examined the bodies reported to District Attorney Edward Swann and Chief Police Inspector William J. Lahey that there was no doubt that death was caused by a bomb of tremendous power. It is believed that the infernal machine weighed more than 100 pounds.

"In several of the bodies we found pieces of iron, and these have been turned over to the police," said Chief Medical Examiner Charles Norris. "They appear to have been made from window-sash weights that were sawed into small pieces. There is no doubt that a bomb caused the explosion. The nature of the wounds shows that."

RECALLS McNAMARA'S CASE.

William J. Burns, whose detective agency is employed to guard the Morgan building, said he believed that the bomb mechanism was similar to that used in the McNamara dynamiting cases, when cheap alarm clocks were used to set off the explosive. It was the Burns agency that ran down the McNamara dynamiters.

"The time clock was probably set for 12 o'clock noon in this instance," said Burns. "It is possible that the plotters hoped to stop their wagon directly in front of the Morgan bank but were delayed by heavy traffic and were compelled to pull up in front of the United States Sub-Treasury building across the street. There were great crowds in the street at the time.

Graphic Scene of Terror Following Wall Street Blast

EYE WITNESSES TELL OF TERROR

Hysterical and Screaming Girls Fill Wall Street As Explosion Causes Havoc

New York, Sept. 17.—Eye witnesses of the bomb explosion which caused death and panic in Wall street gave graphic descriptions of the terror which reigned in the financial district following the disaster.

A vivid picture of the explosion was given by Miss Ella Perry, twenty-two, stenographer in an office directly opposite the scene of the catastrophe.

GIRLS SCREAM IN TERROR.

"I was washing my hands, preparatory to luncheon," she said, "when the explosion came, shaking glass and plaster in our office. I did not wait to get my hat, but fled with the others into the street. We were horror stricken. The girls were screaming in terror. Policemen at the door made us get back into the building.

"There were not less than a dozen dead bodies on the sidewalk in front of our building and the Sub-Treasury. Some of them had their faces blown completely away. Some of them were legless—oh, it was awful!"

CROOKS REAP HARVEST.

The streets then became filled with hysterical and screaming girls. Crooks broke through the police dead line in the Wall Street district in the confusion and excitement many persons in the crowded streets had their pockets picked.

An injured man in the Broad street hospital said he had seen a wagon and an automobile collide in front of the Morgan bank followed by the explosion.

"There was a terrific shock with great detonation and a shower of glass. Thousands of persons were passing along Broad and Wall streets. Everybody stood still for a moment, as though stunned. Then there was panic, every one starting to run. Women were knocked down and trampled.

Many injured persons were carried out of buildings and lifted up from the pavement. I saw one man whose leg had been torn off. Three ambulances came and first aid work started."

"It was in the midst of the lunch hour. I believe that the conspirator purposely chose this time knowing that it would be easier for them to escape in the crowded street. They could not have been far away when the blast went off. So far as we can learn the wagon had halted only a few minutes before the explosion. Immediately after the blast the air was filled with the fumes of picric acid."

Investigators probing the report of Allen O. Myer, chief investigator of the Burns Detective Agency, that, as a result of secret information which his agency received, all their Eastern clients had been notified of impending outrages by the "Reds," whose threatened intrigue included a plan to tie up every railroad and steel mine before cold weather set in.

DISCARD ROBBERY THEORY.

The authorities have discarded the theory that a robber band hoped to wreck the Morgan bank and the United States sub-treasury and loot the vaults under cover of the general panic and excitement. It is admitted, however, that such a plot, if successfully carried out, would have yielded a rich harvest. There was $900,000,000 in gold bullion stored in the vaults of the United States assay office and $1,000,000 more in the United States sub-treasury. The amount of gold bullion and coin in the Morgan bank and the nearby Bankers' Trust Company is not definitely known, but is very large.

With dawn today the army of investigators was reinforced. Renewed efforts were made to gain information as to the identity of the horse and wagon that had carried the bomb. The carcass of the dead horse was minutely examined. It was found that the animal was newly shod and that it had recently been clipped.

Detectives have been assigned to canvass all blacksmith shops in New York to check up the owners of horses shod within the last few days. Detectives are making a similar investigation on Long Island and at various places in New Jersey, where anarchists were formerly known to gather.

"A one-horse affair of the 'rack' variety. The bed was enclosed in a network of slender poles and rails. It was painted yellow. Regular explosive wagons are painted red, are entirely covered, carrying a red flag and are emblazoned with big warning placards."

INJURED GIVE CLEWS.

All of the injured who are able to talk are being examined in hospitals and their homes by Federal and municipal detectives. They have been able to give information of some value, but most of them said they had not noticed anything until they were knocked down by the earthquake-like explosion.

Those who were in the immediate vicinity of Broad and Wall streets said that the chiming of the clock in Trinity tower had barely ceased when a muffled roar like a blast of artillery broke forth. Buildings rocked and the air was immediately darkened by smoke and flying wreckage.

A sheet of flame leaped through the windows of the Morgan bank and the Sub-treasury. This flame had the appearance of coming from the bank and it was this phenomenon that led to the original report that the explosion had occurred in the Morgan bank.

The echoes of the blast rang through the canon-like streets between the towering buildings. A pall of thick, oily yellow smoke arose as the streets rattled with the crash of falling glass. A great shout arose from the panic-stricken people.

Men and women, aroused to frenzy by fear, began running aimlessly through the streets, and above their shouts rose the screams of the injured.

In the excitement no one thought to look for the perpetrators of the outrage. In fact, it was not known at that time that an infernal machine had caused it.

NINE BLOOD SPLOTCHES.

Nine distinct splotches of blood on the sidewalk in front of the Assay office bore testimony to the fact that at least that many persons were struck down in their tracks.

The limestone front of the Assay office was pock-marked by the explosion from the ground to the stone frieze, twenty feet above the walk. The iron grill work on window and doors was broken and bent. Not a window remained whole in the structure.

The Morgan building offered the most amazing spectacle of the many damaged edifices. The Wall street side of the structure was spattered with blood and debris. Steel screens, windows were divested of all but a few particles of glass. The screens themselves were bent inward and twisted beyond recognition. The great glass dome over the first floor foyer and banking quarters was riddled.

KILLING OF JOYCE.

It was on the Wall street side that young Joyce, chief clerk, son of T. W. Joyce, who had charge of Morgan's gold shipments to the Allies, was killed while reaching for a telephone. He said he had a dinner engagement for this evening and was going to postpone it.

A hole in the sash of a window measuring three inches, showed where a slug of iron, propelled with herculean force, had sped its message of death for Joyce. It was with tear-stained face that Dwight W. Morrow, a Morgan firm partner, appeared on the steps of the banking house to announce:

"Young Joyce has been killed."

In the vicinity of Broad and Wall streets it appeared as though a bit of devastated and war-smoked France had been transplanted by some giant hand for grim exhibition.

MAYOR EXAMINES SCENE.

With mining experts and chemists conversant with the behavior of explosives, Mayor Hylan bent over the slight depression in the asphalt paving which is thought to have marked the spot where the vehicle of death was stationed and examined the marks there.

The dent in the road bed was about three feet in diameter. While there the Mayor was heard to utter:

"I cannot say definitely what it was, but if it was indeed an infernal machine of any kind I would like to offer a reward of $10,000 for the apprehension of the perpetrators."

After a conference with his official family Mayor Hylan said he would call a special meeting of the board of estimate to offer a reward.

HUB PROTECTED ON BLASTS

Fire Marshal Neal Says Chances for Big Explosions Here Are Remote

Boston is the best protected city in the United States, and the chances of a high explosive catastrophe here with destruction of lives and property are absolutely remote, State Fire Marshal George C. Neal declared today.

So complete is the protection given to the city and the Commonwealth, he asserted, that the United States government was recently refused permission to use South Boston wharves for the transfer of explosives to a battleship and the Dupont Powder Company was denied a request to transfer 100,000 pounds of smokeless powder.

"New York could have had the same protection," said Chief Neal. "I advised a combustibles commission appointed by a former Mayor of New York to adopt our rules and regulations, but evidently the money influence of the powder people was too great. The regulations were never adopted."

Marshal Neal's statement of the protection afforded Boston is the story of a single-handed fight waged successively against the alleged powder trust and the New Haven Railroad, when the latter was at the zenith of its career and maintained a powerful lobby on Beacon Hill, He said:

FIGHT AGAINST NEW HAVEN

"About ten years ago when I took possession of this department I learned that three cars containing 64,000 pounds of dynamite and 600 kegs of powder had been placed on the New Haven tracks in South Boston. A stray shot or careless handling would have caused an explosion that would have blown up everything within an eight of a mile at least.

"I demanded that the road explain to me why it allowed such a condition. They told me I had nothing to do with it; that it was an interstate commerce matter. I told them to get that stuff out of here and we would argue about it later.

"I finally got a ruling from the Interstate Commerce Commission that I could consider Boston a terminal and take charge of all the explosives shipped in here. None has been shipped here since that time without my approval. As a matter of fact very little has come in, because I won't permit it to come in in large quantities.

"The railroads beat New York in the courts on this matter, but if they ever started a fight here I would take it up to the highest court in the land, and the people would win.

"The duPont Powder people were bringing enormous cargoes of high explosives here. Boston was being made the shipping and dumping ground for all New England. Boatloads were coming into the harbor, landing at the wharves and transferring the dangerous cargoes to the North and South Stations.

STOPS POWDER SHIPPING.

"Loads of dynamite were passing through Atlantic avenue, with surface cars above and below, streets filled with wagons and trucks, trains and autos and thousands of pedestrians. Wagons were passing through the streets with 2,000 pounds of dynamite at a time.

"I went to duPont's New York agents and told them they must take their high explosives out of here entirely. They said they had been doing it for years, no accidents had happened and they would continue to do it.

"I told them the very next day there might be an accident that would shock the country with terrible effect on life and property. I went to the Attorney-General and the chairman of the Railroad Commission and put it up to them. They said nothing could be done. I said the law must be made to be done. I said the law must go to its down and be blown to hell.

"I then told the duPont people that I would write up a description of the shocking condition—would write it just as one of your newspaper boys would—would submit it to the Governor, ask for special legislation to meet the condition and would publish it to the press.

"The duPont people took their dynamite out of here and haven't brought it back since. Meanwhile I got a bill through the Legislature giving our department absolute authority to fix rules and regulations for the transportation of explosives.

BOSTON WELL GUARDED.

"The railroad on Atlantic avenue put up a fight when I asked the New York agents of the Interstate Commerce Commission for regulations to prohibit the transportation through that thoroughfare. The agents said dynamite was a legitimate article of commerce, such as sugar or coffee.

"I don't agree with you," I said. "It's more like yellow fever and we are not going to allow it to be carried through the state. I am going back and stop it and I will take the responsibility. It was stopped.

"Every person who transports dynamite or high explosives through the streets of Massachusetts has got to get a license. Any policeman or fireman can hold up the load in transit. The carriers are compelled to traverse the avenues used the least for general traffic.

"Only a day's supply is allowed to be taken from the magazine to the place of use at one time. This rarely, if ever, exceeds fifty pounds. It has to be taken back at night, or a guard placed over it. The wagons in which it is transported are of special construction with springs designed to offer the least resistance. They are marked with red 'danger' flags. If there was a collision, the minimum of damage would be done because of the small amount in transit."

Washington Statue Unhurt by Blast

By International News Service.

New York, Sept. 17.—The steps and front wall of the United States sub-treasury are flaked and pitted as a result of the Wall street explosion, but the statue of Washington, surmounting the steps on a stone pedestal, is unscathed.

It was upon that spot that Washington took the oath of office as first President. Havoc is upon every hand, but the bronze Washington suffered not the slightest blemish.

CLAIM SEARLES' MIND UNSOUND

Fraud Also Charged by Nephew in Fight to Break Document

Charges that the will of Edward P. Searles, late Methuen millionaire, was procured through fraud and the undue influence of Arthur T. Walker, Mary A. Rowland, Lewis L. Delafield, and Joseph P. McCarthy are made by Albert Victor Searles of Boston, a nephew, in his attempt to break the document.

It is also contended that Mr. Searles was of unsound mind at the time the will was executed.

The allegations on which the fight will be based were made known when counsel for the nephew filed in the Essex County Probate Court at Salem, a motion for jury issues in the case.

Under the terms of the will young Searles was left but $250,000 out of an estate estimated at $50,000,000.

BOSTON FLOUR FIRM SUES LAWRENCE BAKER

Lawrence, Sept. 17.—The case of the Fulton Flour Company of Boston against W. Skeip of Oak street, this city, a baker, was tried in Essex County Superior Civil Court here. The Boston concern sought to recover the price of a certain consignment of flour sold the local man about two years ago. Skeip contended that the bread he had made from it caused sickness among his customers and that it was unfit for use. On these grounds he refused to settle for it.

$100 INCREASE FAVORED FOR CHELSEA TEACHERS

The teachers of Chelsea settled their salary question at a meeting held before the School Committee in the Chelsea City Hall. The committee on salaries recommended, to the full board, that the salaries of the teachers be increased $100 each for the year. Mayor Breath said he could not consider a $200 increase as the taxpayers must be taken into consideration.

Undertakers to Care for Accident Dead

Springfield, Sept. 17.—A proposition that the organized undertakers take over the Red Cross work in caring for bodies at large accidents and prepare them immediately for identification was favorably reported at the thirty-ninth annual convention of the National Funeral Directors' Association, in session here. It is claimed that the Red Cross would be glad to be relieved of the work.

The plan is to have undertakers all over the country organized into groups or battalions, with capable officers and full equipment. A detail would be sent to an accident immediately upon its occurrence and care for all bodies without monetary consideration. A committee has been appointed to prepare plans and the matter will be voted on at once.

DESCHANEL HAS RESIGNED

French President Persuaded to Quit by Wife After Mysterious Fall Into Lake

By Universal Service.

Paris, Sept. 17.—Inside information here makes known that the resignation of President Paul Deschanel yesterday was decided on September 1 after the President, while presumably promenading in the park of the Rambouillet Chateau, was rescued from the park lake to which he was found sinking. His valet, who was fishing a few hundred feet away, was unable to state how the President happened into the lake.

Madame Deschanel, broken-hearted, immediately drew up a letter of resignation, which she induced her husband to sign, declaring that she prefers quiet life with her husband out of office rather than one in which the cares of the presidency would imperil his health.

Taking matters in her own hands she instructed a friend to purchase the Villa Antibes, near Nice, to which the Deschanel family intends to retire early in October, immediately following the election.

ROXBURY POLICE FIRE AT FLEEING TIRE THIEVES

Hundreds of apartment dwellers living near the old ball grounds on Huntington avenue were treated to a display of shooting when two officers from the Roxbury Crossing station emptied their revolvers at two men believed to be automobile tire thieves.

The men were noticed with tires about their shoulders. The police men called on them to halt and they increased their speed, disappearing into the darkness. The tires were later found near the New Haven tracks.

FIRST WIFE ALIVE; SEEKS A DIVORCE

Chicago, Sept. 17.—William W. Lively has asked the courts to right his marital tangles by granting him a divorce from his first wife and annulling his marriage to a second. He alleges that he thought his first wife, Mrs. Annie Elgin Lively, dead, after she had deserted him October 10, 1915.

He then married Mrs. Mary Hibler, alias Wilson, November 26, 1917. The latter Mrs. Lively claims that she has discovered she is still married to George Wilson. Lively, since his second marriage, has learned that his first wife is still alive.

RAYMOND'S

Superintendent Raymond Syndicate, Boston, Mass. Lynn, Mass., Sept. 7, '20

Dear Sir—I have just received the suit of clothes sent to me by parcel post, and cannot let it pass without showing my very great satisfaction and appreciation for the same. I doubt if the same service could be duplicated by the high priced clothing stores of Boston. I had not even tried on the suit. I gave your man, Mr. Andrews, my size, and about the color I wanted, and I could not possibly have done better and I had it fitted at the store. The fit was perfect, with absolutely no alteration, the color and texture also could not have suited me better, and all this for a $18.00 suit. I have read many alluring ads of other stores, but I can say in all truthfulness, Raymond's is the first store that I have found that fulfilled every promise and statement made in the full page ad in the papers of Boston. I have one of the $18.00 suits as sold in that great sale, and will state no exaggeration I would not sell it for $38.00, and doubt very much if it can be duplicated in Boston at that figure. If Raymond will take all the trouble and pains they took with me for a $15.00 suit, I wonder what they would do if I wanted one for $50.00. I don't care what you do with this letter; paste it in your front window if you want to, because you certainly have made an 100% booster for Raymond.

Very truly yours,

A PERFECTLY SATISFIED CUSTOMER.

FIND 'DEAD' MAN BY OLD LETTER

William P. Ham of Farmington, N. H., Missing for 25 Years, Is Located by Son

Manchester, N. H., Sept. 17.—After having been thought dead for a quarter of a century, William P. Ham, former Shubert, Nebraska, man, who disappeared twenty-five years ago, has been found living quietly in his old home in Farmington, Strafford County, New Hampshire.

Ham was found by his son, Elmer Ham, of Shubert, Nebraska, through an old letter written forty years ago, which he unearthed in an old trunk, which had not been opened since his father disappeared. The elder Ham was declared dead by the courts and his estate distributed in accordance with the laws of Nebraska.

SON VISITS OLD HOME.

Mrs. Ham, wife of the missing man, died fifteen years ago. Elmer Ham was the only one of the four children remaining in Shubert.

The letter found in the trunk was from his father's sister, who lived in the old Ham home in Farmington. Elmer Ham had forgotten that his father had a sister.

Without any previous announcement of his coming, Elmer boarded a train and went to Farmington. Here he not only found his father's sister, but the father himself, now eighty years of age. A reconciliation between the father and son took place.

SERVED IN CIVIL WAR.

According to the story told by the old man, he and his wife had quarreled. Without saying anything to anyone of his intentions, he quietly left Shubert and went to San Francisco. When he became too old to work, he went to his boyhood home in Farmington.

He draws a pension of $40 per month as a Civil War veteran. He served with the Fifth New Hampshire Infantry.

AUSTIN WILL FIGHT TO GO BEFORE JURY

Upon the issue of the alleged unsoundness of mind of the testator the contest over the will of the late Samuel Austin of Roxbury will go before a jury in the Suffolk Superior Court.

Austin died last May, leaving $25,000—almost all of his estate—to Colby Academy in New Hampshire. The Rev. Charles L. Page, formerly of the Dudley Street Baptist Church, is executor of the will. Mrs. Jennie Claverley and Samuel Austin, heirs-at-law, are the contestants.

CARMEN CLAIM FARE BOOST IS TOO HIGH

Lawrence, Sept. 17.—Members of the Lawrence Street Car Men's Union declare that an attempt is being made to use them as "goats" in the recent increasing of fares by the Eastern Massachusetts Street Railway Company. They admit that part of the fare boost is possibly caused by the raising of street car men's pay, but the increase in fares is far beyond what is necessary to meet this additional expense. Following an obstructive meeting of the union, they gave out a statement in which the company is accused of getting 41 per cent. out of the passengers to pay a 21½ per cent. boost in pay.

COAL MINERS TO RUSH OUTPUT

Normal Production of Anthracite Expected by Monday; Many Collieries Working

By International News Service.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Sept. 17.—Anthracite production will be resumed on a normal basis starting next Monday, the twenty-day strike of mine workers being brought to an end by a proclamation from the policy committee of the United Mine Workers which directs that all union men return to their labor at once.

Large numbers of the strikers went back to work today and scores of collieries that have been in idleness had steam up and wheels humming, but nothing like a general resumption of industry will come before the start of next week.

The proclamation of the policy makers was joyfully received throughout the hard coal fields.

D., L. & W. to Segregate Its Coal Business

Washington, Sept. 17.—The Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad today made application to the Interstate Commerce Commission for authority to issue capital stock "to the full amount of its surplus," which now exceeds $90,000,000. In its application the company announced that it is now ready to segregate its coal property from its railroad property and to confine its operations to those of a transportation company.

EVENING WRAPS FROM PARIS

Attractive Patou Models Feature Boston's Fall Fashion Display

Jean Patou, the Paris designer, is well represented in the models which Boston shops are showing this week. One of the most original garments on display anywhere is an evening wrap of black cloth, with a hood resembling a monk's cowl. The hood is faced with red, almost cardinal in shade. The front panel of the cloak is made a bit like a vest, runs all the length of the garment and is also red. In the window where the wrap is shown, a golden-haired model wears it. The combination is very smart.

Never were there more beautiful showings of baby things than this Fall. It is as if the heart of motherhood, solicitous, careful of baby's needs, had employed itself lovingly to welcome the youngster.

PRETTY BABY WRAPS.

The baby wraps to cover the youngster in his bassenet are particularly worthy of mention. One is a quilted puff, of pale blue, embroidered with pale pink flowers in dainty wreaths. The other is knitted covering, also of pale blue, combination of wool and silk, each very light and warm. And the first is only $4.50. The second is $8.

For the woman who looked at duvetyn last year, to long for it and not be able to afford it, this season brings a pleasant change. For duvetyn of good quality, may be bought in many popular shades for $5 a yard or a little less. One store is showing gray and brown and henna, besides all the fanciful new colors, for $4.50. This is a bargain which every woman should know about.

SIX VALUES IN DRESS GOODS.

Any season's shopping, as every woman knows, is never made up of apparel alone. That is why six values in dress goods, as offered today by a big department store, should interest woman.

These six are, first, a figured georgette crepe, 40 inches wide, for $1.95; a printed radium, for the same price; colored crepe de chine, 40 inches wide, for $1.95; lingerie satin for $1.69; black charmeuse for $3.50 and a good black dress satin for $2.98 a yard.

No mother, providing for the Fall and Winter needs of her young daughter, can afford to forget rain garments for the child. That is why two different rain garments seen in a store on Summer street, are so worthy of consideration. The first of these is a girl's raincoat, with a smart little storm hat to match. It is for the growing child from six to fourteen years. The second is a heavy rubberized satin rain cape, with a fancy-lined hood. The colors are wine and navy. The ages are from six to fourteen.

A NEW STRAPS POPULAR.

A tendency marked this Fall is the leaning toward ankle straps in dress shoes and slippers. The straps come in the satin shoes and also in the leather. They are narrow, sometimes merely crossing once or twice over the instep. Again they are crossed high up on the ankle, where they are tied or buckled, huskin fashion. These are notions from the French, of course, as everybody knows, and for health and practicability they are worth considering. They give support, often needed, to the ankle, besides they prevent slipping at the heel, which, as every woman knows, ruins the comfort of any shoe.

BOMB WRECKS SALEM STORE

Blows Sleepers From Beds, Fires Building and Creates Panic in District

The explosion of what is believed to have been a dynamite bomb, early today, wrecked the provision and grocery store of Mrs. Jenny Bertini, No. 42 Margin street, Salem, set fire to the building and threw lodgers in the tenement above the store from their beds. The lodgers escaped from the burning structure to the street in their night clothing.

The store is located in the heart of the crowded Italian district and threw the section into a panic, many families fleeing from their homes, scantily attired.

The building where the explosion took place, is a two and one half story wooden structure. Following the explosion, which could be heard for a mile, the flames spread rapidly. Two fire alarm boxes were pulled and the police called to the scene. Order was restored among the excited residents after much difficulty and the firemen quickly subdued the flames.

The owner of the store could furnish the police with no explanation for the explosion.

Mayor Andrew J. Peters has joined the Bring-Your-Lunch-From-Home Club advocated by the Boston American as a means of compelling Boston restaurant proprietors to reduce their prices.

Not only does Boston's Mayor indorse the idea of carrying lunch from home, but he practices what he preaches by carrying his luncheon to City Hall from his Forest Hills' residence. When a Boston American reporter called at the Mayor's office to see the city's chief executive, he was eating a fine lunch prepared by his wife.

SAYS PRICES OUTRAGEOUS.

"I think the idea of carrying lunch from home is an excellent one," said the Mayor. "I do it myself quite often. The prices in Boston restaurants are outrageous. There was a time when you could get a good lunch for a reasonable sum, but now it is out of the question. You know I am not above carrying my lunch from home. Many people think I am wealthy, but really I'm not."

The Mayor's luncheon consisted of dainty sandwiches prepared by Mrs. Peters, apple pie, cheese and coffee. The coffee came from a restaurant. Mayor Peters believes that if men and women of Boston in larger numbers would carry their lunches from home it would be only a short time before the restaurant proprietors would lower prices.

LAUDED BY COUNCILLOR FORD.

Mayor Peters' lead is being followed by many others at City Hall. It is estimated that more than 100 clerks in the various departments carry their lunches.

Another city official who is strongly in favor of the Bring-Your-Lunch-From-Home plan is City Councillor Francis J. W. Ford. "It is one of the best things the Boston American has ever done," said Ford in commenting upon the activity of this newspaper. "Many workers, especially girls, have felt a little sensitive about carrying their lunches even though they could not afford to buy a decent lunch in a restaurant.

"They felt that criticism would follow if they carried lunches from home. All that was needed to bring the thing about was for a paper such as the Boston American to advocate the idea. It is splendid work and the American is to be commended for what it is doing. It will bring the restaurant profiteers to their senses."

HOW NON-MEMBERS FARE.

The "Lunch" editor received the following letter from a woman victim of a profiteering restaurant: "Following is an example of more profiteering in Boston: Last Friday I went into a tea roomson Summer street, a short distance from Washington street. Ordered a lobster salad sandwich—sixty cents on menu. When the waitress brought it, I thought a mistake has been made for besides the customary two slices of bread there were lettuce, celery, a very small amount of dressing and two small pieces of lobster, so small, in fact, that had it not been for the color, I should not have known they were there.

"I spoke to the waitress about it but received no satisfaction. Knowing the stand you are taking in this matter I hope you will find space to print this experience. Had I received a regular lobster sandwich I should not have objected to the price, but next time I will order a celery and lettuce sandwich (thirty-five cents), and who knows but a piece of lobster may slip in."

Have you joined the Bring-Your-Lunch-From-Home Club? Why talk about profiteering when you can prevent it by carrying your own lunch?

AMERICAN WOMEN FORM DRUG HABIT IN PARIS, SAYS PROFESSOR

Following is the second instalment of an authentic expose of wild Paris night life, the indulgence in which is assigned as contributing to the tragic death of Olive Thomas, the beautiful American movie picture actress who swallowed poison of r a party in the Montmartre. The investigation was made by C. F. Bertelli, Paris correspondent of Universal Service. Instalments will follow each day until the facts gathered have all been told.

Combing Won't Rid Hair of Dandruff

The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

Do this tonight, and by morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop at once, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and never fails to do the work.

By C. F. BERTELLI.
Universal Service Staff Correspondent

Paris, Sept. 17.—The courageous stand of Senator La Masella in the French upper house in July against the dance halls of the type that have been characterized as productions of the Greeco-Roman orgies was without avail.

The managers of those places refused to ruin the season at the very moment of "the American invasion." The American reformers who are here will never succeed in stamping out vice in Europe unless they first carry out a vigorous campaign in America.

Professor Martin, a leading drug specialist of France, told Universal Service today that the price of "dope" in Paris is now so high that only Americans could afford its indulgence.

"The drug habit," he said, "is immensely popular with the rich Americans, especially the women, who once they arrive in Paris cut in in wild fashion.

"The blame for this deplorable state of things is entirely with the husbands and fathers, who allow their wives and daughters to visit Paris alone. No French father would dream of letting his own women go on an American trip without escort."

Leo Tellonius of New York enjoys a splendid viewpoint of the inner workings of rings within rings in the Parisian and practically expatriated American group that maintains the entertainment for the foreign visitors. He is a pianist, and enjoys the favor of the smartest set. He told Universal Service:

BLAMES CURIOUS WOMEN.

"Cocaine and similar drugs have been and are wrecking the lives of innumerable American men and women in Paris. During the war American officers were lured to the houses of the so-called society women who indulged in this vice. There they tried the insidious 'dope.' They liked it and came back for more. They tried it again and again until finally they succumbed completely to its clutches.

"I know one man—a boy of the finest of family—who within a fortnight became such a wreck that he had to be relieved of duty with the A. E. F. I know of one prominent American girl who lost not only her health but all moral sense.

"The psychology of the pleasure seekers was explained by Claud Farrere, a prominent French psychologist and author of "Les Civilises," meaning "The Refined Ones."

U. S. WOMEN PATRONS.

"The Parisians," he said, "do not indulge in drugs to the extent that the Americans do here. Cocaine is the favorite of the Americans. They generally carry the deadly white powder in costly jewel boxes. Morphine is the oldest drug, but this season it has been discarded in favor of the more deadly heroin.

"There are opium dens in Paris, the same as in San Francisco, only those here are more sumptuous. It is no wonder that the voluptuous surroundings that can be found here make short work of the moral sense of innocent American girls and women, fresh from clean American surroundings.

"When once such a life is tasted the sense of propriety disappears. The girls and women are likely to risk anything and lose everything to quench their thirst for novel sensations. Opium smoking has increased this season owing to the rise in price from $15 to $1,000 per pound. A single pipe today costs $20."

What seems to be outstandingly the worst crime of all of the Americans who find themselves in an atmosphere of unrestraint, is the practice of bringing their wives or the young women in their care to the special establishments of a semi-private nature where vice is without a limit.

I have before me the statements of owners of the most luxurious of such resorts that the mainstay of their trade is the patronage of American women who come to the places accompanied by American men.

Here the revels take whatever form the drink excited minds demand and they go to satiety. Military men of high rank have brought their wives this season owing to the rise in prices

Missiles Hurled in All Directions by Force of Explosion Caused Death and Disaster

Every window in this cigar store on Broad street, near the scene of the blast, was broken. The store's stock was thrown about, much of it being found on the sidewalk. The result was similar to the effects of a tornado. Business was resumed at once. Photograph by International.

As soon as the explosion occurred brave volunteers took up the work of rescuing the injured and sending them to hospitals. The men shown in this photograph are gathering up the remains of those whose lives were snuffed out without a moment's warning. The bodies were badly mutilated. Photograph by International.

ARMY READY FOR BOMB TROUBLE

Adequate Plans to Protect Boston From Outrage Made by General Shanks

Dynamiters or bomb-throwers seeking to start a reign of terror in Boston would be put down in short order by the United States military forces here. This was the confident assertion of army officers today.

Adequate measures have been taken to protect the city against any widespread campaign of terrorism in the wake of the blowing up of the Morgan offices in New York.

Military forces in this area are well equipped with machine guns, rifles, gas masks, radio searchlights and wireless apparatus, according to high authorities at the First Army Corps area headquarters.

Officers of the Army Intelligence Department are and have been for some time in communication with city and State authorities. They have offered their services in ferreting out and suppressing any plot against the peace and safety of the community.

Major-General D. C. Shanks, in command of the area, was following developments in New York today with close interest. He is an advocate of complete preparedness, and his policy is to keep the troops under his control ready to respond to an appeal from the civil authorities at a moment's notice.

Army officers say that while they could not guarantee to stop isolated outrages, any serious campaign to overthrow the government would be beaten into the ground before it was well started.

General Shanks is using the happening in New York to urge army men to enter the rifle match which will be held in Wakefield from October 2 to October 12. He is strong for such matches for their benefit to marksmanship.

I. W. W. Issue Statement Absolving Them From Blame

New York, Sept. 17.—Belittling the statements attributing the Wall Street explosion to an "extremists" plot and declaring that the police were likely trying to "frame up" some labor organization, officers of the I. W. W. and other radical organizations all denied any knowledge or connection with the outrage.

Secretary J. H. Byers of the New York defence committee of the I. W. W. issued a statement which follows in part:

"The police are liable to frame up all kinds of things in an effort to connect some labor organization with a case of this kind. We consider ourselves too busy to mix in with such kind of stuff as the Wall Street dynamite explosion. We sincerely regret that the explosion occurred and that so many people were killed and injured.

"The I. W. W. has other things to do than to mix in such stuff as was pulled off in Wall street."

Morgan Building Saved by Bomb-Proof Construction

New York, Sept. 17.—Total destruction of the J. P. Morgan building was avoided largely on account of the pains taken in its architecture to make it bomb proof.

The building was erected at a cost of $4,000,000.

The bomb-proofing of the structure was accomplished by making the walls of concrete and two feet in thickness. Across the top of the building a heavy wire mesh was stretched taut. Any missile thrown on the top of the building would rebound harmlessly.

The windows of the building are covered by bronze gratings which are reinforced by wire.

No Dynamite in Use Near Wall Street

New York, Sept. 17. — The theory that the "mystery wagon" in the Broad and Wall streets explosion had a legitimate load of dynamite was eliminated by Fire Marshal Brophy, who investigated the disaster for the fire department.

He said his inquiry had disclosed that no dynamite is being used in connection with the wrecking of the building adjoining the stock exchange at Wall street nor anywhere else in the neighborhood.

Besides, he added, deliveries of dynamite are made only Wednesdays and Fridays.

Banker Injured by Explosion

New York, Sept. 17. — Alvin W. Krelch, president of the Equitable Trust Company, was injured by flying glass in the Wall Street explosion.

SECRET SERVICE PROBES PLOT

Department of Justice Rushes Big Corps of Men to New York

By International News Service.

Washington, Sept. 17.—With additional guards thrown about government buildings, crime detecting agencies of the government, acting under special orders of Secretary of the Treasury Houston and Attorney-General Palmer, today massed their operations in an attempt to clear up the mystery of the Wall street explosion.

Trained experts with special knowledge of bomb plotting activities were under orders to proceed to New York from other districts to aid William J. Flynn, chief investigator of the Department of Justice, into the probe begun by the Attorney-General.

Chief W. H. Moran of the United States secret service today employed the full strength of his branch of the service and combined his efforts with other investigators. Secretary Houston announced that extraordinary measures had been taken by the secret service to assure protection for government property, especially the treasury and assay offices.

PALMER SILENT.

Attorney-General Palmer refused to comment until further reports were in hand to show the influences back of the explosion. Officials at the Department of Justice inclined to othe belief it was the work of anarchists.

They said if certain parts of the supposed bomb apparatus can be recovered it may be possible to trace the makers of the bomb, and eventually the criminals who planted it.

At the headquarters of the secret service it was said to be possible to determine the origin of the bomb by certain peculiarities of workmanship which might be shown.

RELEASE ONE SUSPECT.

Overnight many alleged extremists have been brought under surveillance not only in New York, but in adjacent districts, where their activity has been most pronounced. Additional agents were sent to Paterson and other New Jersey cities. Attilio Mino was released after being closely questioned here.

At the Department of Justice it was said that no information had come from any source to indicate that the Wall street explosion was part of a campaign of terrorism.

Attorney-General Palmer was at his office early today and his chief assistants were in constant communication with Chief Flynn at New York. Mr. Flynn kept the Attorney-General informed of developments, and it was said that Mr. Palmer later might make some statement.

The Attorney-General, it was said, would not care to talk about the matter until the cause of the outrage has been more definitely fixed.

Col. Neville, Bomb Victim, Well Known in Boston

Colonel Charles Neville, who was killed by the explosion in New York, was a frequent visitor to Boston during the war and following the armistice. By a strange coincidence he was an expert on at least one explosive, namely, toluol, a hydro-carbon.

Colonel Neville was attached to the Auditing Department, Washington, as an expert during the war, and after the armistice was signed he was transferred to the Claim Board. While in this city he was the guest at the Harvard Club of Captain Henry Frothingham, who was in charge of the Intelligence Department, First Army Corps Area.

WORTH BAGLEY, BLOWUP VICTIM, NOT DANIELS' KIN

Washington, Sept. 17.—The Worth Bagley injured in the New York explosion is not a relative of Secretary Daniels of the Navy or of the noted Bagley family of Washington, it was stated today. David Worth Bagley, the Secretary's brother-in-law, members of the family asserted, is in Holland. All other members of the family are accounted for.

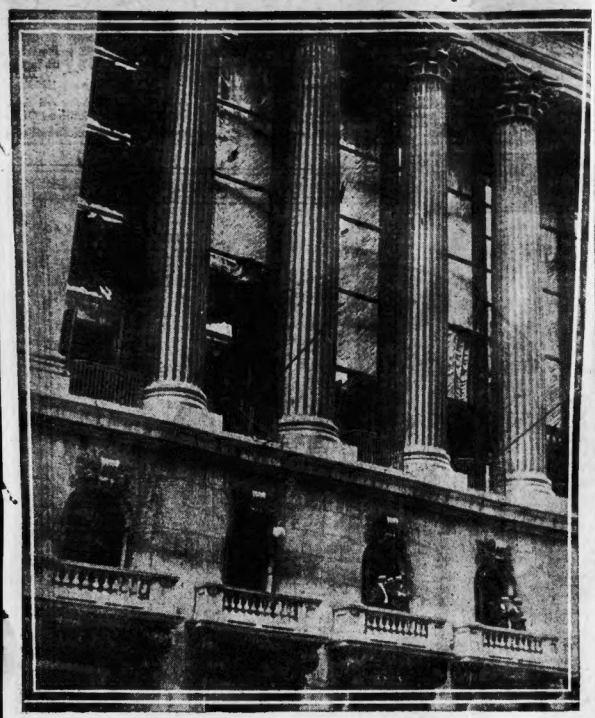
Scene of Disastrous Explosion Patrolled by Soldiers as Detectives Hunt for Clews



Every window in the New York Stock Exchange was shattered, some of them having completely disappeared. This photograph, by International, shows the missiles were thrown high in the air, the windows far from the ground being wrecked.

William J. Burns was one of many detectives who went to the explosion district to search for evidence of a plot. Burns, in this photograph, is on the steps of the Morgan building. He is wearing a light suit. Photograph by International.

Soldiers from Governor's Island—U. S. regulars—arrived soon after the disaster. In this photograph, by International, they are seen at the statue of George Washington, which was not touched, although buildings in the immediate vicinity were damaged. The soldiers found little use for their bayonets.

SCOTLAND YARD AFTER 'REDS'

Officials Aroused by New York Outrage; Morgan Refuses Public Comment

London, Sept. 17.—Scotland Yard today tightened its espionage of anarchists and dangerous radicals who are known to the police as a result of the New York bomb outrage. Scotland Yard officials said they had no information to support the rumor of an international terrorist plot.

J. P. Morgan, who is in Scotland on a vacation, refused to make any public comment upon the attack against his bank. Mr. Morgan has been reassured from New York that his son, Junius Spencer Morgan, was not injured by the explosion.

Mr. Morgan plans to remain in Scotland, and it was declared today at the local branch of the Morgan Bank that it was not known when he would return to New York.

All attaches of the London branch of the Morgan Bank are secretive about the exact whereabouts of Mr. Morgan, but he is believed to be at his hunting lodge. The impression is given that the financier took careful precautions to prevent any attack upon his life before he began his vacation. The following telegram was received from the bankers:

"I am overwhelmed by news of the disaster. Rush all available details."

Beauty's Ambition

To Rid the Face of Pimples and Such Blemishes is a Step Toward Life's Chief Accomplishment

One of the most aggravating conditions to any woman is the presence of pimples and such blemishes. Her ambitions are first a home, then children and then her appearance.

One of the greatest blessings she can have is a fine, fair skin on face, neck and arms. The use of Stuart's Calcium Wafers now and then for the blood condition makes this possible. Women are great sufferers from skin disorders and hence their complexions are marred because of this fact.

Stuart's Calcium Wafers give you a complexion that rivals the ideals of an artist to produce. By acting upon the skin and blood they thus contribute to a more beautiful complexion.

RILEY ASSAILS DRUGGISTS

Malden Justice Says Unprincipled Pharmacists Are Worst Evil of Prohibition

The unprincipled druggist who is selling bad whiskey at a profit of several hundred per cent. is by far the worst evil that came with prohibition, according to Judge Thomas P. Riley of the Malden District Court, who lectured before several hundred people in Malden City Hall.

"The liquor traffic as conducted at the present time is deadly," he said, "while every-day occurrences are seen which are so horrible as to be almost beyond belief." Druggists, he declared, are more responsible for these "occurrences" than bootleggers of moonshine.

To curb the unscrupulous druggist Judge Riley suggests: the sale of liquor only in bottles sealed in bond; the sale of Jamaica ginger and other liquor substitutes only on a physician's prescription; the appointment of an auxiliary liquor police force of unpaid but qualified citizens and the filing each month to the city or town authorities of a report similar to those now filed with the Federal government.

"Many druggists are violators of the laws of liquor, of decency, and life," said Judge Riley. Many of them have out-Ponzied Ponzi in their endeavors to make wealth quickly. Some of them make as much as $50,000 to $100,000 a year on an investment of but a few hundreds.

"The druggist stretches his liquor stock by mixing it with cheap spirits and chemicals. He cheats the doctor and mulcts the patient by charging $6 to $14 a quart for stuff that cost him $2 to $12 a gallon, and he reports considerable quantities used in the making of extracts and other concoctions which never go into these preparations, but are sold without prescription and record."

Judge Riley also recommended that doctors be required to cooperate in discrediting the unprincipled druggist and should inform themselves of the repute of the druggists before writing prescriptions. They should also demand samples of the whiskey, from time to time, that are sold to the patients, he declared.

Thanks American for Bicycle Given Son

Revere, Sept. 14, 1920.

Editor American:

I wish to thank the Boston American (also the donator) for the handsome Indian bicycle won by my youngest son, Robert Wilson Early. It was "the greatest bicycle run I ever witnessed and I have ridden in some pretty big ones myself twenty-five years ago. I was pleased to see so many of the "Old Timers" on this, the greatest bicycle run ever held.

The American certainly deserves great credit and praise for it being such a success and so well managed.

Yours truly,

It's time for a new suit. Where shall I go, and why?

The answer is MORSE'S.

Because MORSE-MADE CLOTHES are sold DIRECT to You by the maker without a middleman's profit.

Buying clothes the MORSE WAY means reaping the advantage of instant market conditions, for it requires but three weeks to produce the MORSE finished product.

Furthermore, prices for MORSE CLOTHES this Fall have not been increased over former seasons irrespective of our margin of profit. The idea being to encourage the public to buy now, when merchandise is fresh, meeting at the same time the general demand for more value for less money.

In a Morse suit you will find more fine tailoring, more attention to details, more quality in the materials and more value in the finished garment than in clothes elsewhere at the same price.

That's a pretty broad statement, but we've got the goods!

300 surprising new velvet bags

What girl wears her mother's clothes?

WE HAVE heard of sons getting up early in the morning to wear dad's necktie; and we know some households where there is a free fight at breakfast time because Jennie, aged 14, insists on wearing a dress belonging to Mary, aged 20.

But few and far between are the cases where Louise, aged 18, wants to wear mother's clothes, even if the size is the same.

The Filene fourth floor has grown through that idea—by strict adherence to the principle that misses want distinctly misses' clothes.

Filene's was the pioneer in having specialists to buy and sell nothing but clothes for young folks.

Not only different people to buy them, but different folks to sell them, with the shops placed way off from similar shops for women, so there would be no temptation to "double up"!

Clothes for young folks are the heart and soul of the fourth floor—and not a mere sideline.

YOUR CORSET—buy it first. Have it fitted to you

The Filene method of fitting a corset aims to accomplish four things:

1. You acquire the "perfect" figure of your type
2. You save money that might be expended for alterations on outer garments
3. Your corset wears longer
4. You are immeasurably more comfortable

Take the matter of corset bones. The finest corset in the world might have bones a little long or a little short for your figure. This would be apparent when, too late, the bone had poked through, or the corset had lost its shape. Filene fitting makes the corset fit as though designed for you.

How do YOU choose a corset? Do you buy because you see the corset on the counter? because your best friend swears by it? because the price is low or because the brocade is pretty? Different figures require different corsets. Filene corset fitters can tell at a glance what corset will bring out your best points.

INDIANS DEFEAT SENATORS, 1-0, AND REGAIN LEAD OF LEAGUE

YANKS ARE BEATEN IN CHICAGO

Midget Kerr Goes Full Route Against Four New York Pitchers

Cleveland, Sept. 17.—By winning from the Senators by the least possible margin, 1 to 0, while the Yankees were dropping a hard-hitting, free-scoring game to the White Sox in Chicago, the Indians regained the top rung in the American League championship race. The game with Washington was one of the few in which the ball was not batted out of the eighth inning when the last batsman faced Coveleski, the winner of the contest.

Some excitement in a game which was in no way exciting was supplied in the seventh inning, when Ira Flagstead drove out a single.

Manager Speaker of the Indians held the Senators to four scattered hits, one of which was a two-bagger.

Chicago White Sox Dump Yankees

Chicago, Sept. 17.—Manager Huggins worked four pitchers against the White Sox, last night, as well as the champions gathered only six hits to New York's four, but bunched the errant locals' besides pitching and position to win, 6 to 4. Quinn was one and two for the visitors, while he was relieved in the early part of the fourteenth inning by Pennock, who finished the game. Manager Hoyt put Cicotte in the box for the White Sox.

In the camp, when the phone rang, some guy would yell, "Oh, Jack, telephone." Both Kearns and Dempsey would start from different parts of the building and one of them would be disappointed.

TACK' HARDWICK TEACHING HARVARD BACKFIELD YOUNG IDEA

PRACTICE BEHIND GATES

Real Contact Tackling in Order in Daily Sessions on Soldiers Field

Huntington "Tack" Hardwick who never played on a losing Harvard football team, is coaching the Crimson backfield during the week end practices. Hardwick was a master of tackling while he was in the game.

He cleverly put out opposing tacklers when his team mates carried the ball, and did it largely through throwing his body at the opposing player and accomplishing what is known as "pulldowns." Now Hardwick is engaged on Soldiers Field in teaching others to do what he was so successful in accomplishing.

The contact tackling has started at Harvard. Quarterbacks protected by interference were dummied time and again by fleet footed ends aided by the centres. The punters kicked and the wings ran down the field to nail the catcher and eight times out of ten had their man before he moved many yards.

Busy Days on Soldiers Field

Harvard first squad tackling the dummy.

Captain Arnold Horween of Harvard

Head Coach Fisher Back on Job

Head Coach Bob Fisher returned to Boston today after attending the wedding of Tommy Campbell, former Harvard back on Fisher's team, which took place in New York.

A short session of secret practice was done for today and instruction in tackling again took place in the stadium on the special dummy placed there for that purpose. Tackling among the college players is apt to be carelessly done, and the Harvard coaches aim to have their men letter perfect in bringing an opposing player to the ground.

Coach Parmenter, who has served as directing coach in Fisher's absence, coaches the centres continuously on passing, and yesterday drilled them on getting down the field as a part of the defence on punts. Havemeyer is showing a slight edge over the others so far, and upon his experience gained last year on the varsity will receive first consideration for the Holy Cross contest a week from Saturday.

ENGELHORN AIDE TO CAVANAUGH

Former Dartmouth Star Now in Charge of Linemen at Boston College

Wesley Engelhorn, former Dartmouth star and one time a pupil of Cavanaugh, has assumed charge of the line candidates at Boston College. Today he sent them through a long drill in charging, followed by a dummy scrimmage with all the forwards taking active part.

Engelhorn was impressed by the calibre of the men he is whipping into shape, and is pleased with their willingness to work. Without doubt the Maroon and Gold line will compare more than favorably with former ones at the Heights.

Cavanaugh Busy With Backfield Men

Cavanaugh now has more time for the backfield men and is trying to develop an understudy for Fitzpatrick. Fitz is representing B C on the gridiron for his fourth and final year and is aiding the head coach in finding prospects for punters.

RUTGERS' PROSPECTS DIM AS STAR TACKLE IS LOST

New Brunswick, N. J., Sept. 17.—Rutgers football prospects received another temporary setback when it was learned that Duff, one of last year's men who was expected to fill a tackle position, will not be able to return to college this fall, while Larry Sykes, the other tackle, is ineligible to play because of scholastic difficulties.

Harry Troup another veteran who is counted upon to plug the tackle gap has not reported yet for practice and barring a fast end is also missing. New men are being used in these positions and have been showing good form.

Sanford has been devoting considerable time in the coaching of the backfield with the assistance of "Mike" Wittman, former Rutgers star "Bob" Sass, former All-American tackle of the Scarlet eleven, reported yesterday to assist for two weeks in whipping the line men into shape for the opening game with Ursinus on September 25. There are forty men on the squad now, and when college opens on September 22, it is expected that at least twenty-five more men will report.

BOSTON "CASEYS" CLOSE SEASON TOMORROW

Boston Council K. of C. closes its regular league season tomorrow afternoon at the Randolph street grounds with one of the toughest games of the year, playing Roxbury Council. The teams have met twice so far and each has won a game and, as a defeat now will cost Boston Council the pennant in Division No. 1 of the K. of C. League, the game should prove as hard fought and exciting as any played this season. On account of the interest being shown by the followers of both teams preparations are being made to handle a large crowd.

Want Game Tomorrow

The Jamaica Plain K. of C. team is anxious to arrange a game away from home for next Saturday afternoon. Phone Joe Walsh between 3 and 4 at Haymarket 5060.

NO "PRO" FOOTBALL FOR LAFAYETTE COACH

Philadelphia Professionals an eleven composed of former Princeton, Penn, Pennsylvania and Lafayette

Easton, Pa., Sept. 17.—Dr. "Jack" Sutherland coach of the Lafayette College football team, denies reports that he will play with the professional football this season. Sutherland, who is assistant at Lafayette, will play provided reports that neither he nor "Pud" Seidel, his assistant at Lafayette, will play professional football this season.

VETERAN LINEMEN SHOW UP AT N. Y. UNIVERSITY

New York, Sept. 17.—Coach Gargan, of the New York University football team has a wealth of experienced linemen with which to work. From last years eleven he has all of the forwards except Sorey, who graduated. Among the most likely of the newcomers is Tucker, who was on the All-Southern prep school team. He is a centre, but it is practically certain that this place will be retained by Brin, the veteran pivot man. In that case Gargan may convert Tucker into a guard.

End material is also plentiful, and includes the four men who alternated at the wings last season.

FOOTBALL PROSPECTS AT LEXINGTON HIGH BRIGHT

Prospects of brinking football back at the Lexington High School after a lapse of several years with no school eleven, look good, for a good-sized squad of about twenty-five candidates reported for the first practice session on the Lexington Athletic Field. Principal Elon C. Merry and Albert F. Higgins, faculty director of athletics, were in charge of the workout, which lasted about an hour, and which included class drill and running. The squad will meet today to elect a captain and manager.

WEAFER AND MACCHIA OUT WITH TUFTS SQUAD

Halfback Buck Weafer and End Bart Maccia were in for Tufts football practice today for the first time this season. They bring the squad to thirty.

Head Coach Dr. Ed Parks was assisted by Eddie Brawley, former Holy Cross centre, who later will coach Allen School.

TWO BIG GAMES FOR ST. JOHN'S, K. OF C., TEAM

Owing to cancellation, the St. John's K. of C. of Cambridge will play Chelsea K. of C. tomorrow at Cambridge field, instead of Cambridge Council.

Sunday St. John's will play the Bennetts of Somerville. Davidson and Nolan will be the battery for the Knights with Weafer and Dwyer working for the Bennetts.

$6 and $8 Hats - $4.35

I CALLED the turn. What goes up must come down. Months ago, when other retailers were buying, prices were way up. I was patient—I waited. When the manufacturers found their production was greater than the demand, prices broke. Then I stepped in and bought the very cream of the hat industry, at prices but little higher than I'd have to pay for second and third rate hats.

Here they are: the finest hats that ever entered my stores. Come, get the biggest hat bargain of your life for but little more than others ask for the inferior article. Understand, you can buy cheaper hats most anywhere—cheaper in price, cheaper in quality. But who would pass up a $6 or $8 hat at $4.35 to save a few cents, and wear a hat that looks and is inferior.

Don't take my word for it. See for yourself. My windows will show you hats with those rich, wide, silk bands with bows in back you'll not find them elsewhere. Think of it—genuine $6 and $8 felts—soft and stiff—all at—

LEW TENDLER MADE FAVORITE TO DEFEAT FRANKIE CALLAHAN

BOXERS MEET AT CUDDY'S ARENA TOMORROW

By JACK CONWAY.

Lew Tendler has been made a slight betting favorite for his ten-round bout with Frankie Callahan at Cuddy's open air arena at Lawrence Park this afternoon. There is a great deal of speculation as to the probable outcome of the contest, which is the principal match on Ted Richard's card, to be staged in New York's first post-season outdoor show.

The fact that it is the first championship of the year and that the winner will be matched with some other star stepper adds interest to the affair.

Callahan, who has many admirers in this city, is confident he will defeat Tendler and has been training hard for the contest. Tendler arrived in Boston this morning and has been taking it easy at his training camp in Revere.

Tendler Is Due in Boston This Evening

[illegible] condition and confident he will [illegible] honors tomorrow afternoon. [illegible] there is a large delegation of Hebrew fans going to Lawrence to see the fight.

The fact that it is for the welterweight championship of the world should attract a big crowd. Callahan fans may secure reserved seats at the Mechanics Building, where the fight will be staged, at No. 247 Washington street.

Armory A. A. to Feature Welterweight Bouts

The Armory A. A. is going to make a start to clear up the New England welterweight title muddle. Both Jack Kelly of Everett and Young Kilby of Boston have been considered welterweights. The winner of next Monday night's affair will be pitted against some other star stepper. All bouts will be fought at 145 pounds.

Young Kilby is today recognized as the New England welterweight champion. The writer, however, knows of no reason why Kilby should even be considered a welterweight. He has been boxing in New England rings since a year ago last March. Both he and his newspaper champion have refused to meet Kilby unless he get on a scale at 145 pounds or less. Kilby has often declared he would be glad to make 145 pounds for a bout with any welterweight in the world.

How Much Does Kloby Weigh? Nobody Knows

[illegible] writer has never had the good [illegible] to see Kloby make the weight [illegible] weight he claims he can. Neither has any other boxing [illegible] for if Kloby were a legitimate [illegible] he would not be so [illegible] about weighing in before ac[illegible] correspondents. There is not a [illegible] bashful about Kloby when [illegible] ring.

Kilby of South Boston and Young Quill of Brockton will meet in another ten-round match at the Armory this show. Hart Jones of Revere and Young George Gardener will box eight frames, as will Johnny Furey of Roxbury and Jack Chapman of Chelsea.

Danny Krammer to Get Severe Test

Danny Krammer will experience plenty of opposition when he collides with Johnny Russell of New York in a ten-round bout at the Commonwealth A. A.'s show tomorrow night. These boys recently met at Portland. For six rounds Krammer had the better of the going. Then Russell got started and beat the West End bantamweight to a finish—well in the closing rounds of the engagement. Russell has fought Bobby Dyson, Max Williamson and a lot of other fast steppers.

Larry Costello will meet Young Gould in an eight-round bout at the same show, while Bert Jones and Mack Murphy will also battle for eight sessions.

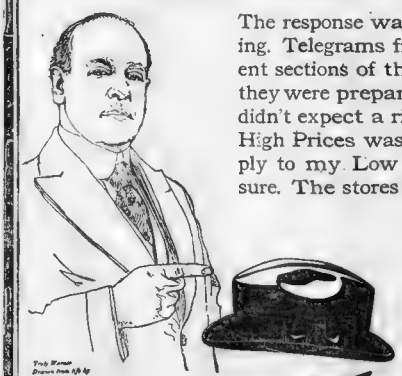
APPRECIATION

A happy throng of satisfied customers is the only reward that I wanted when I published an announcement two weeks ago that I was going to do business without profit this Fall and asked your co-operation to help me give the final blow to the High Cost of Living in the High Price of Hats.



The response was almost over-whelming. Telegrams from my men in different sections of the country advised me they were prepared for a rush, but they didn't expect a riot. The revolt against High Prices was spontaneous. The reply to my Low Price was quick and sure. The stores were crowded.

There's a spirit of enthusiasm that permeates the whole Company when you're playing to full houses in every city. This is tempered by a feeling of renewed responsibility and a resolve to do your utmost to deserve the approval of the Public.

Old customers told their friends. New customers told others of the wonderful values. The Hat Trade was sad and the Public was glad to see the High Prices shrink. It was a merry Thrift Carnival Crowd that made it necessary to play to Standing Room Only.

The hats in my window talk Quality and Style louder than Price, but the Price ($3.85) speaks in a language all its own this Fall. It sounds strange but it's true.

Let's Have the Truth.

In Chicago a Grand Jury is going to see what it can find out about these rumors of crooked work in baseball.

It is calling before it men who have insinuated that they are in possession of information regarding this crooked work.

They will be given an opportunity to show whether they know something, or are merely posing as "wise guys."

Baseball magnates should also be called and compelled to explain why they forced certain players out of the big leagues. They should be required to let the public know the details of any dirty deal involving the safety of the game.

Baseball belongs to the public. If it is in danger, the way to save it is to let the public know where the danger lies.

Let's have done with rumor and innuendo. Let's have the truth.

HELIOTROPE

A Stirring Motion Picture Serial of a Father's Love and Sacrifice

Read This Story Here Day by Day, Then Watch for It at Leading Theatres

"Heliotrope," from the story by Richard Washburn Child, is a Cosmopolitan production released as a Paramount-Artcraft picture

Directed by George D. Baker

By Jane McLean

Heliotrope Harry, holding the photograph of Alice before the Governor, pleads for a chance to protect her from her mother's schemes.

THE Governor Mercer was an ... [illegible] ... looked like the ... [illegible] ... was considered a ... [illegible] ... at times he could not eat, ... [illegible] ... close his eyes. For the first time in his life he began to realize what it meant to take ... [illegible] ... great ideal of sacrifice.

... [illegible] ... of the west drowned, and the Governor who had backed Pyne in all his innovations, sat at the warden's desk and listened to petitions for pardon, read through papers and asked the prison chief for comments.

"Now, this No. 430—Harry Haddock—I notice you don't sign it yourself, Warden, why is that?"

Pyne shifted uneasily. "I'll tell you, Governor; I'm passing this to you. The fact is this man saved my life once, and I'm in a position that might be open to question. I'm for him, but I'd rather have you pass in his case and decide on the evidence."

Fair Enough

"Well, that's fair enough. Will you have him brought in?"

Pyne raised the phone and directed a guard to summon the prisoner. The Governor smiled at the name Heliotrope Harry.

"I'll tell that, Warden?"

Yes, that's his crook name—loves heliotrope, always wore ties and socks of that color, always used the sort of perfume and never was seen without a sprig of the flower in his button hole."

And his record—has it been good or bad, and something about his having saved your life?"

If it hadn't been for Heliotrope Harry I wouldn't be here," said Pyne, simply. "I'd say his record was perfect and I suppose it shouldn't influence you, but there is the fact that he did save me."

Whatever the Governor thought he said nothing, and in the moment that elapsed after the warden's answer the door opened and two guards entered with the subject of conversation between them.

There was nothing of the man-of-the-world air about Heliotrope Harry as he faced the Governor and the warden in his striped suit. He stood timidly on the threshold, a great hunger in his eyes as he glanced uneasily at the man who could set him free or leave him to eat his heart out.

"Hello, Harry," said Pyne, cheerily "sit down." the guards each with a grip on his arm escorted him to a chair.

"That's all," said the warden, dismissing them with a wave of his hand. "I'll call for you; wait outside."

Tells His Story

A little doubtful the guardians of the law left the lifer to tell his story.

The Governor glanced at the petition, then suddenly looked up at the man.

"What have you to say in your own behalf, Haddock" he asked kindly.

What a difference the years had borne in his manner of addressing his fellow creatures. Harry licked his dry lips, cleared his throat and ... [illegible] ... warden for encouragement and ... [illegible] ... cleared his dry throat.

There were thousands of things he wanted to say — hundreds of pleas he had prepared, but when it came to the point they were all ... [illegible] ... his soul was contained in the few short words—bromidic and ordinary words—that he flung at the man looking at the pardon

"I want to get out, Governor."

The Governor smiled and the warden, too.

"No doubt, my dear sir; that's the plea of every man who's in here—every convict seems to want just that, but that's hardly to be regarded as a reason why I should open the gates."

I've done fifteen years, Governor," Harry went on, growing desperate. "I've got to get out! I've got a daughter—"

"In some sort of trouble, I suppose," the executive broke in—"wants to see you?"

"No, no! Governor, not see me—no, no, she doesn't even know she's mine, and with the help of God she never shall."

Shows Picture

Decidedly this was a new phase of what promised at first to be the same old story, and the Governor recognized the situation as unique. He was almost oblivious of the warden's sharp words reprimanding the convict for the explosion which sent his voice forth in a sort of threat.

"I beg your pardon, Governor—I'm—I'm half beside myself—you ... [illegible] ... I've got to get out—I've got to get out!"

"Is this picture of a little girl—but a drop of her mother's blood in her, not a ... [illegible] ... like the ... [illegible] ... of me, not ... [illegible] ...

Governor Mercer reached out and took the photograph. He ... [illegible] ... it was the face of one who sought to trace in the sweet young face some features that might be ... [illegible] ... resemblance to the man incarcerated for life. But there was nothing there but the qualities of goodness.

"Go on, Haddock," said the Governor, lifting his eyes.

"She's having her chance, Governor. I gave it to her—I left her when she was only a baby with enough money to take care of her education on the steps of the convent in New Orleans and from that day to this she's never known me, nor her mother, nor seen me, nor even suspected that her father is Heliotrope Harry in her life and her mother Joe Haddock, who's trying to ruin her now."

He Had a Reason

While passing an old fashioned inn in Scotland, some tourists were annoyed by a bagpiper who was tooting atrocious sounds through an instrument dilapidated and ... [illegible] ... Good gracious, man, said one of them, "why don't you have your bagpipes repaired?" "Hopeless! Ye dinna understand," was the reply "If my bagpipes were in good tune the inn mon wadna give me a shillin' to make us ..."

CHAPTER LIX.—Continued

"WAS it because he loved Bab?" the man insisted. "I know he did. That is," he added, "I was told that he did. Was that true?"

Cross-Examination

"I believe it was"

"Do you think he loves her still?"

"I have not seen him," Daisy evaded.

Arthur Paige moved impatiently. I feel like a cur, questioning you like this. And I will stop. But first let me ask you one question more. Did you ever fancy that Barbara cared more for one man than for another before she became engaged?"

"Yes."

"Who was it?" Arthur asked. "But no—that is not a fair question. I should not have asked it."

"And I could not answer it," the girl said. "But, oh, I wish Bab were supplied."

"And now—to change the subject abruptly—will you help me about the list of people I am going to have for my little girl's birthday party? Can you think of anybody besides the usual crowd, here?"

When Daisy spoke she was gazing straight ahead of her.

"You might invite Bob Elliot. It would please him to be asked."

CHAPTER LX.

IT WAS the Sunday following Arthur's drive with Daisy Greenwood.

John Brandon had dined with the Paiges, as he usually did on Sunday. And, as was also his custom, he asked Barbara to go for a drive with him that afternoon.

Arthur watched the girl as she accepted. Her acquiescence was polite, but it was not eager.

"Thank you," she said. Then with a brightening of the face. "Perhaps Uncle and Aunt will go, too—if you don't mind, John."

John accepted her suggestion with a promptness that showed it was a pleasant idea to him as well as to his fiancee.

"That will be delightful," he declared "You will come, won't you?" appealing to his host and hostess before Cynthia could accept. Arthur spoke

"No, thanks, John. You are very kind—but there are some business matters I must talk over with Cynthia this afternoon—if you will excuse us."

"On Monday, Arthur?" Cynthia protested.

"Yes, on Sunday, my dear sister "the sooner the day, the better the deed."

As soon as Brandon and Barbara had driven away, Arthur addressed his sister

"Cynthia, please come into the library."

She followed him, perplexed and slightly uneasy

"Cynthia, did you ever tell Barbara that her father left her entirely dependent upon me?"

"Well, Arthur, I think I may have—"

He interrupted her "Answer me frankly, please. For I shall find out the facts anyway Did you tell Barbara that or did you not? Yes or no?"

"Well, then, yes" defiantly.

"Why?"

"Because I thought she ought to know it."

"Why" he demanded again.

"Why—because—it seemed to me only right and fair, rather, that the child should know how much you have done for her she is young and reckless, and I was afraid she would be imprudent and not consider all she owed you."

Owed Him Nothing

"All she owes me" the man repeated indignantly "She owes me nothing never has and never will. Did you suggest to her that her support had been a drain upon my resources—that it was anything but a joy to care for her?"

"No that is I never suggested that it was not a joy to you"

Cynthia answer directly, please. Did you speak as if it would not always be easy for me to care for her? You may as well tell me just what you did say for I shall ask the child herself if you do not."

"There is no need of getting excited, Arthur," she reproved "I acknowledge that I did tell her the facts and did remind her that you had been like a father to her—that your own wish was her happiness. And that, to ensure this you would even sacrifice yourself."

"You made a great mistake in saying that, Cynthia To child already has me that I wanted her to be happy I never wanted her to suspect that she was dependent upon me."

"But fortunately it is not too late to reason to her on that point. Before she marries I want her to understand that I have made my will giving all I have in half to her part to go to you the other to Barbara. I shall also tell her that while she simply would have never yet lived up to our income. Were the dear little girl to live with me for the rest of her life I would not miss what I spend on her."

"Since she is engaged to a rich man she must comprehend all this. I will not let her marry with the feeling that she is poor, dependent upon a wealthy husband for every cent."

He stopped and gazed straight into the pale face confronting him.

"And now another thing, Cynthia. I positively forbid you to mention to Barbara the matter on which we have just talked. Understand, I forbid it!"

"Very well"

"And—oh, yes one thing more! When did you let Bab all this stuff? Was it before or since the announcement of her engagement to Brandon?"

The thin lips moved stiffly. "Before."

"Ah, I thought so. That is all I want to know I will detain you no longer. Thank you."

As a Woman Thinketh

By HELEN ROWLAND

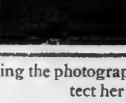
Copyright, 1920, by The Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.

THE Cynic has said in his heart,

"A woman wants EVERYTHING—at least, everything she sees.

"Or happens to think of!"

But it's not true



There are thousands of things that a woman could do without—quite happily!

Oh, thousands of them!

Birthdays, for instance,

And "kidding," and double-chins, and jazz!

Those cute, little mustaches the men are wearing—

And the mustached kiss!

Dancing men, pure and simple—for though not all of them may be pure, most dancing men ARE simple!—

Cursed pie, motion pictures, beautiful trained nurses, a jealous disposition, a jealous husband, breakfast-table persiflage, Freckles. Criticism—especially the home-made kind.

The attentions of married flirts and Summer widowers.

Men who "drop in" unexpectedly.

"Presable companions"—the "come early and never know when to go home" variety.

Who bring candy—an' eat it all up themselves.

The man who insists on telling how he became "a success,"

The man with the "I mmm' habit,

Egotists, poseurs, golf fiends, motor maniacs, professional cynics.

And confirmed bachelors!

These are some of the thousand-and-one things that a woman could do without,

But the things that she CANNOT do without

Are Love, Sympathy, Admiration,

Work, Kisses, the Right sort of Clothes—

And at least One Husband!

The Seven Keys to Happiness—for Women!

Yet, somehow,

The moment a woman finds one of them, she seems to lose another

And the woman who holds all Seven Keys at once

Is as rare as she is Blessed!

That's why a woman is always "WANTING something."

No matter what she HAS!

For, alas, it takes ALL seven of these Magic Keys

To open the door to Complete Happiness

For any woman!

INTO her hurt face came the pink tint of wrath again; but she sat quite still, her head lowered, pulling fronds from the fern on her lap.

"I'm sorry if you're offended," he said cheerfully and lighted a cigarette.

Helen's troubled face cooled; she tore tiny shreds of living green from her fern; her remote eyes rested on him, on the blue hills across the valley, on the river below them, sparkling under the July sun.

Down there, Marie Belter, with her red parasol, was sauntering across the pasture, and Harry paddled faithfully beside her, fanning his features with his straw hat.

"There goes Marie and Fido," said Grayson, laughing "Good Lord! After all, it's a dog life at any angle you care to view it."

"What is a dog's life?" inquired Helen crisply.

"Marriage, dear child."

"Oh. Do you view it that way?"

"I do But we dogs were invented for it. After all, I suppose we prefer to live our dogs' lives to any other—we human dogs—"

Must Have Love

"Phh!' You never before gave me any reason to believe you a cynical materialist. And you have been very unjust and disagreeable to me. Do you know it?"

"I'm tired of running at your heels I suppose A dog knows when he's welcome. . . . After a while the lack of mutual sympathy gets on his nerves, and he strays by the roadside . . . And sometimes, if lonely, the owner of another pair of heels will look behind her and find him padding along. . . . That's the life of the dog, Helen—with exceptions like that cur of Bill Sykes. But the great majority of pups won't stay where they're lonely for such love as they offer. For your dog must have love. . . . The love of the human god he worships. Or of some other god."

He laughed lightly

"And I, who worship a goddess for her divine genius and her loveliness—I am treated at her heels a long, long time, Helen, and I'm just beginning to understand, in my dog's heart, that my divinity does not want me."

"I—I do want you!"

Too Angry to Speak

"No, you don't. You haven't enough emotion in you to want anybody. You're too complete, too self-centered, too intellectual, too clever to understand a heart's desire—the swift, unselfish, unfeigned, unsolicited passion that makes us human. There's nothing to you but intellect and beauty. And I'm fed up!"

The girl rose, flushed and disconcerted by his brutality. Grayson got up, bland, imperturbable, accepting her departure pleasantly.

She meant to go back all alone down the hillside; that was evident in her manner, in her furious calmness, in her ignoring the tiny handkerchief which he recovered from the moss and presented

She was far too angry to speak. He stood under the trees and watched her as she descended the hillside toward the house, just visible below

Down she went through the heated wild grass and ferns, stepping daintily over gulleys, avoiding jutting rocks, down, down down hill, receding farther and farther from his view, until, a long way below him, he saw her halt, a tiny, distant figure shading white and motionless in the sun.

He waited for her to move on again out of sight She did not

After a long while he saw her lift one arm and beckon him.

"Am I a Fido?" he asked himself. "Damn it, I believe I am." And he started leisurely on.

When he joined her where she stood waiting, her brown eyes avoided his gaze and the color in her cheeks grew brighter.

ABOUT OUR GOOD FRIEND

McCauley

Copyright, 1920, by The Ledger Syndicate

McCAULEY VARIATIONS — Macaulay, MacAulay, MacAuliff, McAwley, MacGawley, Magauly, McCawley, McCauley, Wythe, McCauley.

RACIAL ORIGIN — Irish, also Scottish.

SOURCE—A given name.

AS a rule the variations Macauley, MacAulay and MacAuliff trace back to Scottish sources, and the rest, for the most part, are Irish. As a matter of fact there is little difference between the speech of the Irish, particularly in the north of Ireland, and the Highland Scots. Both are Gaelic races. The people now constituting the Highland clans for the most part crossed over to "Alba," as Scotland then was called, from Ireland, about the second century A. D.

The correct Irish form of the family name from which this rather long list of variations has developed, is "MacAmhailsoibh." But the Irish pronunciation of that is much closer to "McCawley" than one would suppose The given name from which "MacAmhailsoibh" is derived is "Amhailgadh," compounded of two words, "amhail" and "gad," meaning "like a wythe" (that is, a form of twisted osier), which explains why the name is sometimes met with Anglicized into Wythe.

There are English authorities who suggest that the Scottish form, MacAuliff, is a development of the Scandinavian name "Olaf." It is possible but not likely. It would be probable if the name were English. But Gaelic names are more likely to trace back to single than to many sources, and the final "bh" of "MacAmhailsoibh" might easily and naturally become a "ff" on translation into English.

In Ireland this name is most common in Munster, Cork and in what was the ancient royal province of Meath.

Beautiful Actress Attributes Her Wonderful Success to Her Famous Complexion

Tells How You Also May Have One

MISS DOROTHY DALTON

New York—When Miss Dorothy Dalton, the beautiful actress who was selected for the leading role in that marvelous Ince production, "Aphrodite," was questioned as to the secret of her phenomenal success, she replied jokingly said, "My complexion When asked further details she explained: "Every one of my friends always raved about the texture and coloring of my skin, and I have no doubt but that my first engagement was made possible through the reputation I had acquired for a beautiful complexion. Managers are like ordinary mortals, they admire a beautiful skin as much as anyone, and in selecting their casts they naturally pick those whose complexions are attractive I think the best asset any girl or woman can have is a beautiful skin and complexion It is easy to have this if one will spend only a little time in taking care of the skin. A girl may be handsome, but if she does not possess a beautiful complexion she will not attract attention anywhere. I am always glad to tell any girl or woman just how she may possess a skin like mine. Here is the recipe. Night and morning cleanse the skin first with warm water, then apply a good cold cream (Lilka cold cream I have found to be the best); after massaging it into the skin take off the superfluous cream with a soft cloth. Then before going out during the day or evening I apply Derwille, a simple toilet preparation which can be purchased at the toilet counter of any up-to-date drug or department store. The first application of this wonderful Derwille will astonish you. It imparts instant beauty to the skin and makes a rosy-white complexion—every one will talk about it. I find it excellent for my complexion, as it protects the skin from all kinds of weather. That's why I prefer it to all other toilet preparations and am never without it. Now that short time is up I'll bet you will want beautiful hands and arms. There is nothing like Derwille for this purpose Many of my professional friends to whom I have recommended Derwille use it in preference to all other face powders or beautifiers. Just try it once before going to the theatre, dancing party or an afternoon call and note the favorable comments of your friends Derwille instantly puts a little tint on your cheeks which defies detection It gives the blush of youth to the skin and stays on until you wash it off. Perspiration does not affect Derwille nor rub off on clothing; it also prevents the formation of wrinkles. For that wonderful for a dark, sallow, rough skin, freckles, tan and for the instant beautifying of the face, Derwille is unequaled. Over 2,000,000 men and women are using it It's absolutely harmless to the most sensitive skin. Just try it once and you will need no further argument to convince you that there is nothing "just as good," "better," or "just like it." Insist on Derwille, then you will not be disappointed.

NOTE—Druggists and department stores everywhere sell Derwille with the guarantee that if you don't like it you get your money back. It is the one beautifier that gives satisfaction to all patrons of the user. You can secure it at all toilet counters in this city.

IRELAND UNDER SUPPRESSION

Sinn Fein Not Allied With Bolshevism, as Glance at Leaders by Miss Thompson Shows

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

Written for the Boston American.

London, Sept. 17.—When Thomas McCurtain, the predecessor of the present Lord Mayor of Cork, who went on a hunger strike in Brixton jail, was killed, the Irish jury who held an inquiry into the case brought in a verdict of murder and named a list of members of the Royal Irish Constabulary—the British police.

One by one that dark roll has been shortened. One by one those whose names were written thereon have dropped from sight, suddenly, and without warning.

One constable against whom there was rumored to be a special vendetta was hurried out of Cork, while his inquiry was still in progress. His friends believed they had established an alibi for him a complete alibi. Weeks passed and the city in the south returned to a normal state of semi-quiet. The constable, soothed by the anxiety of his friends, decided to return. He had not crossed the station platform in the railroad station in Cork when he was shot dead.

Away in the hills, in the Ulster city of Lisburn, another of these "marked men" was met on his way to church one Sunday morning soon after McCurtain's death, and riddled with shots before he could even scream.

THEY NEVER FORGET.

There is something reminiscent of the "knitting women" of the French revolution in this Irish capacity to cherish a hate, to remember forever, and to extract the last farthing of payment for a wrong.

The ordinary soldier in the Sinn Fein cities of Limerick, Dublin or Cork is almost as safe as a civilian visitor. I cannot vouch for the truth of the statement, but I have been told that to shoot a British soldier except in defence, or under specific orders is an offense punishable by court-martial in the republican army. But those men, who because of particular activities are marked for death, are most certainly doomed.

The case of the "G" men is in point. At the time of the rising in 1916 there were certain men in the British police service who knew the faces of every single Sinn Fein officer. It was they who identified Sinn Fein leaders and officers of the volunteers and furnished the information the authorities which led to their arrests. One by one these men met their fate.

"There was a time, if those men had lived not one of us would be alive today," said a Sinn Fein leader.

THE COUNTESS MARCIEWICZ.

The speaker, by the way, was the Countess Marciewicz, the only woman member of the Irish republican administration elected to the Irish parliament by St. Patrick's division, Dublin. Three times arrested, once sentenced to death, and now "wanted by the police," she is the bitterest—I was going to say "most blood thirsty"—member of Sinn Fein administration. And I met her in Ireland.

She is a tall, gaunt, blond woman, careless about her dress, nervous and excited in her manner, with something of the same humorless intensity that distinguished de Valera. In interests, politics she is a socialist and very radical, standing in this particular almost alone among the members of the Sinn Fein ministry.

I met her in a little restaurant frequented by members of the Irish Transport Workers' Union, the body which controls the socialism in Ireland. Through the net too clean windows we could see the stand left by a machine gun which had been covering the building and had only been removed a few days before. We sat at unpainted kitchen tables and drank very strong tea.

The countess offered cigarettes which were hailed with derision. "Is this a time for cigarettes when a nation is on a war path?" she defended herself, "and always smoke Irish cigarettes."

The last cigarette in martyrdom for the cause" exclaimed a labor editor who was with us. "I smoke em in public, as an act of defiance, and everybody glares at me. In the heyday of peace I gave a stack of relief and unattributably reach for 'gold flakes.'"

The countess looked at hers gloomily. "They don't have much kick in them, do they?" she said.

BITTER AGAINST ENGLAND.

On the subject of England she was very bitter. "The hope of the world is in the break up of the British Empire," she declared, in characteristic sharp staccato. "Personally I would sacrifice myself—sacrifice anything or anyone that was trying to accomplish that end. . . . But all that this stupid German put in Ireland was not . . . worse luck."

Some of us have reached the point where anything that England opposes commends itself to us for that reason, also continued. "We don't know much about Bolshevism, but when England takes the trouble to abuse Bolshevism we have a kindred feeling for them. . . . Sinn Fein now is a coalition. It isn't committed to any social or economic theory. We came into office by capturing the British election—so we've got a parliamentary system which we inherited from England . . . but, although we at least a republic we may not want to keep the parliamentary system. . . . We had the idea of decentralization and local self-government long before the Russians.

"All this talk of Bolshevism being allied with Sinn Feiln is stupid—just an attempt to draw a red herring across the path of the truth. It's as ignorant as was the remark of an English lady who said the other day that if you removed all the Russian Jews from Ireland the Irish question would be settled. "Now," she said disarmedly, turning to the labor editor, "how many Russian Jews do you know in Ireland?"

His reflected, evidently desiring to be accurate, "I know four," he said, finally.

SINN FEIN NOT "RED."

With the exception of Madame Marciewicz, who is, by the way, a member of an old landed family from Galway, the predominant complexion of the Sinn Fein administration is not very red, or even very pink. Sinn Fein represents the agricultural, Roman Catholic part of Ireland, which is naturally conservative. Belfast, in unionist Ulster, has the largest socialist minority of any city, as shown by representation in the city corporation council.

Arthur Griffith, the acting president in the absence of Mr. De Valera, and the leading spirit in the movement, is temperamentally a conservative. He is tremendously interested in the American idea of federalism and constitutional democracy. He is known to be opposed to the Marxian philosophy, and his interests are largely agrarian. He has a very different personality from that of Mr. De Valera, and looks like one's conception of a French Senator, with his carefully trimmed and pointed beard and his air of reserve. He is a close student of blue books compiled in war and believes that passive resistance to authority is the most effective weapon against an alien power. He is considered the "strong man" among Sinn Feiners.

The minister of agriculture is now in jail. He again is not a radical in the present day sense of the word. He is a landed proprietor, considered to be the most progressive "gentleman farmer" in Ireland, and is a member of the executive committee of the agricultural Organization Society, whose leader is Sir Horace Plunkett. He has been a land reformer all his life. He is a Protestant, a veteran of the Boer war, and a medalist for distinguished service, and a graduate of Christ Church College, Oxford, where he took first honors in economics. He is in prison for making a nationalist speech.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce would be in jail if the police could serve the warrant which is out for his arrest. He is the man who organized the industrial commission for Ireland.

The courts are under the jurisdiction of the Minister for Home Affairs, who is considered a very able man, not a radical, but a thorough-going democrat. His unlucky is responsible for the issuance of passports is would-be immigrants, for the Irish republic has already established a passport bureau and put it into operation.

MANY TIMES IN JAIL.

The head of the Department of Public Information is another of the Irish ministers in jail. He is a feverish existence swapping from the police. His prison record looks like that of Pip the Pickpocket in a book—as a matter of fact, he is a gentle, blands young man, who had much rather write poetry or play the piano, and who spent the long hours of his last imprisonment writing a play. His hobby is the collecting of first editions.

His chief personal complaint against the British Government in connection with a set of books. "The military who arrested me in 1916," he complained to me in my apartment, "I noticed that while the soldiers were searching me and collecting papers and documents one of the members of their officer, a good-looking young Englishman, was eyeing my books. When we were driving away in the military lorry he spoke about them with great courtesy, especially remarking a first edition of Oscar Wilde, which had excited his admiration. We were both book lovers, so we had a very interesting conversation on the way to the jail, where I certainly expected to be court-martialed and shot.

"But I wasn't executed," he concluded, "and I never saw my Oscar Wilde again."

The sixth article in this series will be published in the American tomorrow.

Stocks Giving Good Account of Themselves When Explosion Suspends Trading

BLOWUP CAUSE OF CONFUSION

Feeling of Panic Allayed by Report That Fatal Occurrence Was Accidental

New York, Sept. 17.—The governing committee, at a special meeting, voted to open the Stock Exchange at the regular hour today.

By BROADAN WALL
Registered U. S. Patent Office.

New York, Sept. 17.—Tickers in the brokerage houses had just printed the noon hour yesterday when the explosion at the Morgan offices shook the street. It found the market in the midst of a sharp advance under leadership of Reading, Replogle and Mexican Petroleum. The sugars and tobaccos were very strong.

Trading was suspended immediately and scenes of confusion ensued that were almost panicky. What allayed this feeling of panic was when the report that it was an accidental explosion of dynamite being carted through the streets in violation of the city ordinance. This report took the wind of the people away from the idea that Reds were making a raid.

Stocks were giving a good account of themselves when business was abruptly ended. Mexican Petroleum, which was ex-dividend 2 points, was selling at the equivalent of 180¾, an advance of nearly two points and a new high price for this movement. Texas Oil had just established a new high record price at 52 with a large volume of business. Sinclair was also moving into new high territory.

Sugar stocks were all strong and the tobaccos had just become active under leadership of American Tobacco. U. S. Steel had gained a point. The market gave every sign of being a very satisfactory session for the full party. Money was at 1 per cent. with the promise of a lower rate before the close of the day.

Replogle was the most active of the steel stocks and had advanced more than three points when the market closed.

Bankers say they expect cheap money for about two weeks while the income tax funds are floating around in the banks. The banks will be enabled to utilize these funds because they may be called any time to deliver them, and therefore they will be available for call loans only. But another brief period of tight money is expected shortly after the first of October, after which permanent easing of the money situation is looked forward to.

U. S. REALTY TAXATION ABOVE EUROPEAN RATES

Professor Richard T. Ely, University of Wisconsin economist, addressed members of the Farm Mortgage Bankers' Association at their annual convention in Kansas City on real estate in the United States is subject to much higher taxation than is imposed on such property in the leading European countries, and he quoted statistics from England, France, Belgium, Germany and Switzerland to prove it.

He said the average proportion of taxes borne by real estate in those countries is not more than one-half to one-fourth of what it is in the United States.

Let the Democratic Convention Reaffirm the Old Democratic Principles and Renew Its Pledge to Old Democratic and American Policies

To the Massachusetts Democratic State Convention:

The national Democracy at the coming election is going down to a tremendous and deserved defeat. But the Democracy of Massachusetts has not so far been guilty of contributing to the events and errors which have created this humiliating prospect.

But if the Massachusetts Democracy has contributed anything to the impending disaster to the national party, it has been through want of resolution, courage and initiative on the part of some of its leaders —but not all of them. Yet the opinions and objects of the rank and file of the Massachusetts Democracy have been sound, and their courage has been equal to any enterprise in the direction of their opinions which their leaders might have displayed.

At the National Convention at San Francisco this Summer a little more singleness of purpose, a little more initiative, a little more courage, would have put the Democratic party on record in favor of recognizing Irish independence and the independence of Korea and Egypt and of all other oppressed peoples, who had indicated substantially their desire for independence.

If the Democratic Party is doomed to come through the chastening process of defeat for its disloyalty to democratic principles and its repudiation of great American traditions, and its strange subserviency to a mystic power at the White House, let the Massachusetts Democracy come through clean. Let the Massachusetts Democracy clean its skirts, so far as it can, of the stains which the Democratic national administration during the last two years has put upon it, and which the Democratic Convention at San Francisco has increased by its endorsement of the Administration's record since the war.

Massachusetts Democracy can keep the colors flying even if they have been hauled down everywhere else.

Even in this dark hour when every preliminary contest foreshadows the coming defeat, and the party colors have everywhere fallen, when real Democrats, falsely led from the true battle ground of the party, are looking with bewilderment for a place to realign, Massachusetts Democracy, by planting its colors firmly on the high ground which the party has always occupied, until false leaders led it into the valley of the shadow of defeat, can make itself the rallying place of the scattered elements of a defeated but wiser party.

Let the Democratic Convention tomorrow reaffirm the old Democratic principles and renew its pledge to old Democratic and American policies. Since it is the fate of the situation and the guilt of false leaders that the campaign must be fought upon foreign and not domestic policies, let the Democratic State Convention do what the National Convention dared not do under the lash of the bailiffs of the White House.

Let them reassert in behalf of Massachusetts Democracy the principle which Thomas Jefferson, the founder of the party and one of the great fathers of our country, laid down as our first Secretary of State when he said:

"How can we consistently refuse to recognize people who ask to establish our form of government?"

And again:

"It agrees with our policy to recognize any government which is formed by the will of the nation substantially declared."

We have practiced this policy throughout our history. It was a policy established by the founder of the Democratic Party and recognized by all other parties then existing and which have come after. Under the beneficent guidance of this policy of recognition of the independence of a people who have substantially declared their desire for independence, we have recognized no less than fifteen peoples, struggling to set up their own government, between the years 1819 and 1898, and we had won for us the great name of a friend of liberty throughout the world.

Let the Democratic State Convention, even if it is a small voice crying in the wilderness of general Democratic demoralization, assert the duty of our government to recognize the independence of Ireland, Korea, Egypt and whatever other small nation demands its liberty.

And let the Democratic Party declare that so long as any nation which is a member of the League of Nations continues to violate the right of self-determination, America will not join that league under any circumstances.

Let the Democratic Convention declare that in its opinion the League of Nations as now constituted, in the language of President De Valera of the Irish Republic, destroys the hope of little nations now striving for their freedom.

The Democratic politicians will do well to remember that Springfield is not in California, and that the Democratic rank and file in Massachusetts will be able to see what they do, and if some of them have to be taken by the scruff of their necks and dragged to the firing line, as happened in the National Convention in California, it will not take a Lick telescope to enable their constituents to watch the humiliating performance.

Men to Blame for Yesterday's Murders MUST Be Found

First reports of yesterday's bomb outrage in New York, with their stories of great loss of life, sent a thrill of horror around the world, which is not lessened as we study the list of fatalities.

What manner of men are those who think to improve the condition of the world by wholesale murder? What kind of intellects are those which devised a luncheon-hour bombing at one of the busiest corners in America?

It will be the earnest wish of every good citizen that the men responsible for yesterday's horror at Broad and Wall streets may be apprehended without delay and speedily placed where they can do no further harm to anybody.

In the meantime the thought occurs that even the diseased mind of the man who actually exploded yesterday's bomb must be staggered today—if it is not always staggering—as he reads the list of his clerk-porter-stenographer-messenger boy victims.

Don't Blame Labor for Street Railway Fare Boost

They are raising the fare on the Bay State Street Railway and in many other places and blaming it on labor.

In San Francisco, where the public own their street railway and operate it, they pay wages that are satisfactory to labor and they give them an eight-hour shift. Moreover, they operate their railroad on the side of a mountain with all its extraordinary expense, and yet they charge but five cents, with the most modern cars and frequent service.

We do not say that the present management may not be right in increasing its fare on the Bay State, but we do say that it must not all be attributed to labor with the public paying the price of past private management with its graft and stock-watering.

When the public is at last obliged to take over again the railroads, they will have to pay for a great many years for the insufficiency and graft of the private management and the longer private management continues the greater will be the price which the public must pay under public operation until it has retired the debt of the old private management.

De Tocqueville, the French political philosopher who made a special study of American conditions several generations ago, remarked that the people get the kind of government and the kind of results under their government which they deserve. So the people who allow themselves to be fooled into the tolerance of private management of great public utilities like our railroads, street railways, gas and electric light companies, have to pay the bill as they deserve to pay it.

Lest We Forget

Last week was the first week in which women have exercised the right of suffrage, so recently conferred on them by the nineteenth amendment of our National Constitution. It is epochal.

Rev. A. E. George has suggested that, in the midst of rejoicing over the winning for women the right to vote, we should not forget the great pioneers of the movement which, as in most reforms, had its nucleus in Boston.

Mr. George reminds us that Julia Ward Howe once said that one of her reasons for being glad that she had joined the suffrage movement was that it brought her into such "high company."

Of course, in this "high company" was to be found those loyal and courageous champions of democracy, whether its principles were being invoked for black or white, men or women, Wendell Phillips and William Lloyd Garrison. Then there were Mary A. Livermore, Lucy Stone, George F. Hoar, John D. Long, Louisa Alcott and Rev. Charles G. Ames.

The woman suffrage, like a great many other reforms, had its small beginnings in Boston. Boston has supplied more devotees of principles while they are still in the abstract than any other community in America, we imagine.

BIG THINGS AND LITTLE

Aren't you too pleased and happy over small accomplishments?

Do you feel pretty good when you have made a little money in investments?

In other words, are you not so overjoyed with the little successes that you do not reach out for the bigger ones?

Isn't it a fact that you do not give your vision any leeway, and you do not look ahead with intensive plans, extensive enough for a big success?

You might have made a great deal more money if you had had a greater desire for the bigger things, and you might have been promoted faster where you are employed had you shown a disposition to forge ahead and were not afraid of work.

The man who wants big things is a great worker, but before that he is a big thinker.

You never get any further than your thoughts and plans carry you.

What is your end, and aim, and ambition?

How much time do you spend shirking work?

Isn't it true you are a little man because you enjoy the little things too much?

Letters to the Editor

Not Proud of British

Editor Boston American:

As a Mayflower descendant, I wish to object to the speech delivered the other day in Plymouth; at least to the part that belittles the other great races who go to make up our great republic. Also the address delivered a short time ago by a Rev. Mr. Sullivan, who said the English-Americans were the best Americans. If that is a fact, the Rev. Mr. Sullivan is hardly a real good American and is speaking, as the saying goes, through his 'at. As an American of remote English ancestry, I am not overproud of the present English governing classes in their unfair, not to say brutal, acts, which are now before the world's eyes.

HENRY ARMITAGE.

More Brisbanes Needed

Editor Boston American:

This is to congratulate Mr. Brisbane on his brilliant article on the Lord Mayor MacSwiney case. More Brisbanes are sorely needed in this fair land of ours to fight the work of the British propagandist. JOHN J. MATHEWS.

Providence.

One Small Hairpin

Did you ever sit on the back seat of a car and watch in awe-struck amazement one small woman and one small hairpin perform stunts that you never thought possible? Then you've missed a treat because given the proper lady and a seemly hairpin and she can do anything but crank up an engine with it.—October Motor.

SERVICE FOR ALL WILL REMAKE WORLD

By The Spectator

THIS article is written at the public writing desk in a little hotel in Iowa. It is suggested by thoughts which came to me this morning.

I had gotten out of a sleeping car at half-past six, before the sun was up, and had gone into the station lunchroom at Burlington, Ia., to get some breakfast. A nice young man behind the counter brought me a cup of excellent coffee and some doughnuts.

The conductor and porter came in and ate. So did a few early passengers. As I watched them, this occurred to me: What are all these people doing? What have they to make life interesting? What is their object in life?

Making Money

Of course we know the usual answer: They are all trying to make money. Money and the things money can buy are supposed to be the springs of human effort.

But is money, after all, the real motive power for all these activities around me? Is not the real feeling that makes these men work, and happy in their work, the conviction that they are doing some real service to the race?

No petty motive nor any entirely selfish motive is sufficient to produce permanent satisfaction. Whether he is conscious of it or not, the feeling that reconciles that waiter at the lunch counter is that he is doing an important and necessary part of the world's work.

Workers Are Happiest

The happiest people in the world are those who have something useful to do. It is the butcher, the baker and the candlestick maker who sing at their work.

The idea of the divinity and necessity and beauty of service is possibly the most redemptive and promising idea that is permeating the world. It is a conviction that will some day remake the earth. Every man, in the coming golden age, will be given his work. There will be no idle classes, either at the top or at the bottom of society. Not even the millionaire's son or daughter will be allowed to control a dollar they have not earned, and society will see to it that there is no poor man out of a job; for every child will be trained to some useful work; they who want work will be given it and they who will not work shall be compelled.

I call this idea of work as the essential element of contentment, the most potent, vital and fecund idea of the twentieth century.

TAXIS AND SENSIBLE SHOES IN BOSTON

By Damon Runyon,

In New York American.

Copyright, 1920, Star Company.

I HOPPED into a taxicab over in Boston the other day and started out to investigate this proposition of sensible shoes on Boston women.

Nearly every woman you see in the streets of Boston wears sensible shoes, stout looking brogans with heels neither too high nor too low. They are shoes that seemed designed for comfort and service.

Rarely did I see the high-heeled, close-coupled lattice work chiropodist's delights, in which the women of other cities encase their feet, to the intense mortification and chagrin of their toes.

These shoes and tight skirts produce a teetering gait that is wholly foreign to Boston. I stood in front of the Copley-Plaza Hotel for an hour, and watched in amazement the Boston women swinging past in their sensible shoes, and skirts that permitted leg action.

Must Be a Law

It occurred to me that there must be some law in Boston on the matter. It seemed inconceivable that there could be so many sensible women in one town, especially on the subject of footwear. There was doubtless a local Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Feet.

I set out to investigate.

Boston probably has the highest taxi rates of any large city in the country. The cabs are pretty good, however. They are well kept. The drivers are efficient. New York has the lowest taxi fares in America, and the worst taxicabs, barring those operated by organized concerns.

I had my Boston driver go back to the Westminster Hotel after I had listened to his taximeter until the conversation got on my nerves. I wanted to consult Mr. Frank M. Sawyer, who has charge of the Westminster cabs, about these Boston rates.

Volume of Business

"Why," said Mr. Sawyer, "it's all a matter of volume of business. We don't get the same amount of hauling in Boston that they do in other cities, especially at night, and we have to pay our drivers more. You don't want to forget," Mr. Sawyer said, "that we have pretty good transportation lines in this town, and, another thing, people do a lot of walking."

This last observation directed my mind back to my original proposition of shoes. It required a lot of nerve, but I stepped right up to the first woman that came along with feet of Boston aspect.

"Lady," I said, "I am not a nut, but what I want to know is why so many Boston women wear sensible shoes?"

"For walking," she replied, calmly. "I take it you are a stranger, and have never paid our Boston taxi rates. Otherwise you would understand why we need walking shoes."
